The Prime Minister said esterday that she would still have ordered the sinking of the General Belgrano on May 2. 1982 even if she had been told that the Argentine cruiser had reversed course and had been sailing away from the British task force for 11 hours.

Mrs Margaret Thatcher said in a letter to Mr Tam Dalyell, the Labour MP for Linlithgow: "No evidence has at any time become available to the Government which would make ministers change the judgment they reached on May 2 that the Belgrano posed a threat to the task force."

The fact that the Prime Minister stands by the war cabinet decision even in hindsight, raises a number of estions. Her letter underlines the strength of the intelligence on the intentions of the Argetine Navy - "clear and unvequivocal indications".

-Hopes of £50 fall in Atlantic air fares

By Michael Baily Transport Editor

Atlantic air fares may still fall by up to £50 before Christmas following President Reagan's dramatic order to the US Justice Department to drop criminal action against British Airways and others for alleg-edly conspiring to force Laker out of business. While Britain does not regard this move alone as enough to justify cheap winter fares across the Atlantic banned by the Dengriment of Transport last month to pressure the US into stopping Laker-type anti-trust cases -talks between the two sides are still continuing and a US delegation is expected in Lundon in a fortnight's time. Meanwhile hopes are high enough among the airlines for them to put together a fresh cheap fares package to await a new Anglo-US formula.

The President's more was greeted by Mr Nicholas Ridley. Secretary of State for Transport, yesterday as "very help-ful" and "creating a new climate" for bilateral talks.

"We hope a new agreement can be reached that will permit low fares to be introduced without fear of US anti-trust action" a Department of Transport spokesman added.

Mr Richard Branson, president of Britain's low-cost airline Virgin Atlantic, who had earlier said the "predatory" £40 fare cuts proposed by major airlines this winter might drive him out of business and hinted at Laker-type action. "It all seems a little cosy that in a democracy President Reagan should be able to interfere with the courts in this way to help a state-owned airline like British Airways off the book," he said.

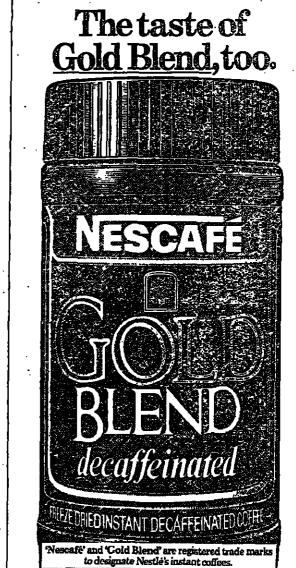

The President's action came as a great relief to British Airways, which said yesterday they were "most gratified". even though it does not protect them from huge damages if the Laker civil action succeeds. Such a possibility still casts a shadow over privatization of BA next spring.

Mr Christopher Morris, the Laker liquidator, said yestercay it appeared President Reagan's action "will have no effect on the civil proceedings which have been brought in the interests of Laker Airways' creditors and for no other reason"

But dropping the criminal action does remove the threat of possible imprisonment of British Airline officals in the US and impounding of assets if the Justice Department case had been carried to a successful conclusion.

While there is no direct connexion between the Justice Department's criminal action and Laker's civil action, dropping the former can hardly fail to indirectly affect the latter. Continued on back page, col 5

Workers have been crossing bers since the strike began on November 5. By Monday night 15,000 of the 28,000 workers were back at their benches.

But the breakthrough came yesterday when mass meetings of more than 7,000 employees at the Cowley body and assembly plants defied their shop stewards and voted overwhelmingly to return last night.

About 5,200 Longbridge workers, more than half the plant's labour force, crossed picket lines yesterday, but Mr Jack Adams, the plant's union convener, refused to say if he would recommend calling off the strike at the mass meeting Wide-ranging statutory safeguards to ensure that building societies do not abuse their market power as they extend the scope of their services were called for yesterday by Sir Gordon Borrie, Director Genreal of Fair Trading.

Abortion increase after Pill linked to cancer

Abortions in England and Wales rose by more than 1,400 after reports last October linking long-term use of the contraceptive pill to breast and cervical cancer. The reports, which were unconfirmed by some later studies, led the Committee on Safety of Medicines to advise women to take the pill with the lowest hormone content.

But figures published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys yesterday suggest that some women ignored advice not to stop taking the pill before seeing their doctors, and became pregnant.

Abortions on women resident in England and Wales in the first quarter of this year, three to five months after the reports were published, rose by 1.157 to 34,914, up 3.4 per cent on the same period in 1983.

The biggest increases came in the age groups where the pill is most popular, with abortions in the 20 to 24 age group rising by more than 8.4 per cent, up 858 to 10.114. There were smaller increases of 300 in the 16 to 19 age group and of 268 in women aged 25 to 29. Abortions in all other age groups, including girls aged under 16, fell, the figures for the first time that the Alliance is a lasting partnership. That is important at the symbolic level. If the two parties were to regard themselves as simply enjoying a temporary liaison to see them through the next election -- they would inevitably be less coonerative.

The Mercedes was a write-off and the other car extensively damaged, the court was told.

It is also significant that the Alliance is now agreed on seeing itself as an alternative to the present Government. To expect the Liberals and Social Democrats to sweep to power at the next election would on present evidence be absurd. But the earlier indication from Dr Owen that he did not think it sensible even to try had unset many Liberals as well as a number of members of his own

They thought that it was tactically inept because the Alliance would lack credibility if it did not present itself as a potential bidder for power. They also feared that Dr Owen's strategy betrayed a lack of emotional commitment to the Alliance, seeing it merely as an instrument for gaining the balance of power as a means towards electoral reform. Now the balance of power seems to be regarded as an acceptable fail-back objective.

sale is such a huge undertaking that the Government's publicists have been kept busy for weeks enumerating the various reco. as it will break. One record about which they have been less than forthcoming is the unpre-cedented cost of the exercise.

Both the Treasury and the Department of Trade and Industry have consistently refused to be drawn on what the final bill for privatizing British Telecom is likely to be. Only notional estimates have so far been laid before Parliament for approvat

That reticence is hardly surprising. The sums involved are going to be very large, and the Government appears to be sensitive to the regular charges from Labour MPs that privatization is "lining the pockets" of merchant banks and stockbrokers in the City.

But partly it is also genuine uncertainty about what the final costs will be. Many of the costs involved, such as the telephone rebates being offered to small investors, will not be known for certain until the issue is over. The bill presented to the Treasury could vary by tens of millions of pounds, depending Government's rather than Brit-

each wants and how long they decide to keep their shares. Preliminary estimates in Whitehall, however, are under-stood to be based on the assumption that the final allinclusive cost of the British Telecom share sale will be at least £200m and could easily be more. It will be more expensive than all the previous privatization exercises put together.

As a percentage of the total proceeds of the share issue, however, it will still be relatively small. Costs of £200m would represent just over 5 per cent of £3,915m which British Telecom is going to raise for the Government. The two biggest elements in the total are expected to be the cost of having the share offer underwritten in the City, and the cost of the package of incentives which are being offered, at the

on how many people apply for ish Telecom's expense, to small

The Government's determination to underwrite all its share sales has been one of the more controversial elements of its privatization programme; critics argue that it is unnecessary and wasteful. Underwriting a new share issue involves a group of banks, pension funds, insurance companies and other big City institutions guaranteeing to buy all the shares on offer in the event of the issue failing to attract enough buyers at the specified price. The final cost of the exercise. the London part of which was completed last Friday, will be more than £60m.

In addition, the Government has to pay fees to Kleinwort Benson, its main merchant bank adviser, and the four stockbroking firms that are handling the issue. These are never normally disclosed on grounds of commercial confi dence, although one broking firm is known to be receiving a fee of between £1m and £2m. The Government does not deny Labour claims that the total City earnings from the issue will be £100m to £120m. The cost of the incentives including the telephone vouch ers and bonus shares offered by the Government, is expected to come to about the same as the underwriting. Each voucher will cost the Government £18, so if a million people apply for an average of two vouchers each, the cost will be £36m.

The next biggest item is the free or cut-price shares being offered to BT's 240,000 employees. Up to 10 per cent of the shares have been reserved for employees, though they are not expected to take them all up. The free share offer alone will cost the Government £17.5m.

The final element is the bill for marketing, including the advertising campaign, the mailshots to all telephone subscribers, the six million pros pectuses, and the fees of the various advisers. Unofficial estimates are that this could cost anywhere between £20m said fried birds in the air, began before dawn on Monday when 80,000 barrels of liquified gas exploded at one of the city's main gas distribution centres. Many houses, constructed from petrol barrels in the poor suburb of San Juanico, simply melted in the heat, killing the occupants in seconds. As rescue workers scoured the suburb and fire-fighters lought isolated blazes inside the depot, survivors spoke of the horror when 300ft high flames engulfed the area.

Mexico City (Reuter, AP) -Rescue workers yesterday found more charred bodies in the ruins of a suburb here, razed by a devastating gas depot fire which killed more than 300 people and injured more than 2,000.

One man said he thought he had gone to Hell when he saw a metal bailding melt. "Hell fires could not be hotter", he said. When the fire started, "I heard a rumble and rushed out into the street but the heat struck me and I ran back inside to help my family. I tried to get my parents out of their house but it was burnt to ashes".

A police sergeant said many people had died half-naked in the street as they tried to outrun the flames which leapt from house to house. Entire families were incinerated in the grimy suburb and the homes of more than 4,000 people were cordon around San Juanico and Surrounding areas evacuated after the blaze in the gas distribution centre owned by the state oil company, Petro-leos Mexicanos (Pemex). More than 50 looters were arrested.

As the fires were brought under control and the scale of the disaster emerged, critics said it had been just a question of time before such a calamity would strike in Mexico City. A diplomat said: "It is not wise to store large quantities of gas or petrol near people. Safety rules have been lacking in the growth of Mexico City.

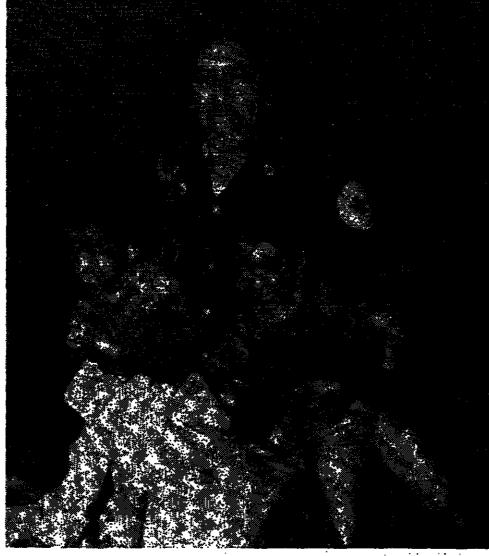

President Miguel de la Madrid issued a statement expression sorrow for those killed and urging the public to join in helping the victims. The Government instituted an emergency aid programme which included distribution of clothing and other necessities and installation of mobile kitchens. Ambulances rescue lorries sped in and out of the area, carrying the injured to seven hospitals and several emergency centres.

At the local police station, charred bodies in plastic bags were laid out until they could be carried to a civic centre converted into a makeshift

Famine in Ethiopia

Guerrillas ambush refugees

From Thomson Prentice Addis Ababa

Guerrillas of the Tigrean People's Liberation Front have launched an attempt to sabotage the Ethiopian Government's resettlement scheme in which thousands of people are removed from famine areas and taken to other parts of the country.

According to reliable sources in Addis Ababa yesterday, the guerrillas ambushed a convoy of seven buses and lorries carrying hundreds of settlers, took the people away and blew up or burnt the vehicles.

Western diplomatic sources also gave some credence to reports that the rebels had occupied the town of Korem, 385 miles north of the capital, after a day of skirmishes with government troops. The attack on the convoy was said to have taken place near Kobo, 30 miles south of Korem.
Government officials denied that Korem, which has 100,000 famine refugees camped on its outskirts, was in rebel hands, and insisted that a scheduled visit today by Dr Garret ETHIOPIA

Fitzgerald, the Irish Repulic's Prime Minister would go ahead. However, they admitted that there had been an "incident" at Korem over the weekend and spoke of limited infiltration of the town by the guerrillas.

The guerrillas, who have been fighting a seccessionist cam-paign since 1962, did take control of Korem for a few weeks last year. Ten European relief workers were taken hostage and released two months later across the border Perez de Cuellar, the UN in Sudan. From Richard Wigg Madrid

Nine years after Franco died, there are still some Spanish policemen who have yet to learn how to uphold the rule of law in a democracy, according to Madrid's magistrates.

After an incident involving one of their members, who was manhandled and disobeved by the police, the magistrates have appealed to the ministers of Justice and the Interior to remedy the situation swiftly.

The Judical Council, the selfregulating body to which all judges and magistrates are responsible. is due today to investigate the incident, which involved Senor Jacobo Lopez Barja, a magistrates known throughout the country. # IT SEEMED AS GOOD A PLACE AS ANY TO START LOOKING FOR NORTH SEA OIL.

A routine press conference in London, and an off the cuff remark by Shell UK's top geologist. Within minutes his comments are on every Editor's desk in Fleet Street, and by morning, being repeated the length and breadth of the country. While the sceptics scoff, the politicians pray. If what has been hinted at is indeed true, it will alter the economic and political fortunes of Britain for decades to come. Out in the North Sea, it is reported, Shell expects to strike oil.

The financial markets of London buzz with anticipation following Shell's discreet announcement of a significant gas discovery 32 miles off the coast of East Anglia. Within two years Shell and other companies are bringing North Sea gas ashore, and with it a dramatic revival for the British gas industry. Plans are made for completely converting the National Grid to natural gas.

1 9 6 7

Armed with the latest seismic data, two geologists from Shell set up a small office in a tiny flat, over a bookshop, in the centre of Aberdeen. It seems as good a place as any from which to tackle their awesome task. They have been instructed to begin exploration of the vast and hostile waters of the northern parts of the North Sea.

At the northernmost offshore well yet drilled in the world, a veil of secrecy descends over Shell's activities. Communications with the mainland are suddenly coded through 'scrambler' phones. Information is rushed to Shell's scientists for prompt analysis. Until, as abruptly as they began, the exploration team cease all activity, seal the well, and are clearly seen making off for entirely new locations. A simple manoeuvre to ensure that nobody will guess what they have found.

Shell proudly announces the discovery of what will prove to be a giant oil and gas find for Britain, the Brent Field.

1 9 7

The latest analysis of the Brent Field shows that the possible reserves of oil and natural gas liquids are double the original estimate. With Britain's oil deficit still around £3.8 billion, the news is welcome indeed.

1 9 7 6

The very high ratio of gas and gas liquids to oil being produced at Brent leads to a daring new scheme. A pipeline 278 miles long is to be laid on the seabed, to bring ashore the gas and gas liquids for separation. It will be the longest, and deepest offshore pipeline ever built and is yet another challenge for British industry. Much of the technology required for North Sea development must be capable of operating in waves of up to 100 feet high, and in gusts of wind up to 100 miles per hour. In this instance, underwater cameras, side-scan sonars and computer systems are needed that will operate 600 feet beneath the sea.

1 9 7 8

The scheme is a success. Now it will be possible to bring the gas and gas liquids ashore for further use. The gas will be extracted and fed into the National Grid.

It would be possible to split the remainder into ethane, butane, propane and natural gasoline important resources for industry. To do so, a highly advanced plant, costing many millions of pounds, will have to be specially built.

1 9 8 0

Work begins on the £400 million Gas Liquids Plant being built by Shell at Mossmorran, and on the 138 mile pipeline that will feed it. Soon Mossmorran will be the largest construction site in Europe.

1 9 8 2

Oil production from Brent approaches 310,000 barrels per day. This vast quantity helps transform Britain's oil deficit of yesteryear into a surplus of around £4.4 billion.

1 9 8 4

A VIP gathering to witness the opening of the new Mossmorran plant. Distinguished speakers touch on one or two environmental aspects of the plant, such as how it has been built tucked into the contours of the land so as to be as unobtrusive as possible. Also mentioned are the industrial aspects, such as how the hydrocarbons being produced will ultimately be used in the manufacturing of a thousand and one household items, from lipsticks to records.

But above all, it is noted that the opening of Mossmorran marks the culmination of the twenty years in which Shell, and the countless number of smaller British companies that have worked for her, have invested thousands of millions of pounds and great skill and ingenuity in the North Sea.

With excitement, we all look forward to the next twenty years.

Civilians face uphill task as Uruguay poll heralds generals' exit

Uruguay goes to the polls on Sunday to put an end to the 11year-old military government which citizens in this traditionally democratic country call an aberration in their history.

The normally staid streets of Montevideo, the capital, are awash with colour, with thousands of banners, advertising dozens of parties and factions, hanging from the balconies of once grand buildings. Even in the quietest neighbourhood, campaign jingles, and politics has become the exclusive topic in street corner cafes where, not so long ago, a careless remark could land one in jait.

Two traditional middle-class parties, a powerful coalition of leftist groups, and a few smaller parties are contesting the race to replace the discredited military, which is due to hand over power on March 1, 1985. The winner will face the unenviable task of repairing a recessionravaged economy, controlling the resentful military, and finding funds to finance the historically overburdened state sector at a time of declining export earnings.

The military seized control in 1973, one year after having defeated the left-wing Tupamaro terrorist movement, and banned all political parties in 1976. The generals committed themselves to a return to democracy in 1980 after a proposed constitutional amendment legitimizing their political role was defeated in a plebiscite. They are leaving behind an economy marked by 15 per cent unemployment, with real wages about 50 per cent lower than when they took office.

Despite the loss of their favourite candidates, both parties agreed to participate in the election anyway. The Blancos, who have been transformed under Senor Ferreira from a conservative party with roots among the landed oligarchy to a progressive, anti-military party attractive to younger voters, chose Señor Alberto Zumaran, a 49-year-old lawyer with a reputation for standing up to the military. Schor Zumaran has been barnstorming the country in a colourful "victory caravan" promoting his party's plans to nationalize foreign banks and carry out agrarian reform if elected. He has also vowed to call new elections "as soon as possible" to allow Senor Ferreira to stand.

The one candidate to have been the first choice of his party is the Colorado Party leader, Señor Julio Sanguinetti, who is thought by Western diplomats to hold a slight edge over Señor Zumaran. A 47-year-old lawyer, he describes himself as "a social democrat who realizes the limits of state power and advocates more orthodox econ-omic policies than his rivals. Colorado Party strategists say Señor Sanguinetti offers voters "a calm transition to democracy".

The Broad Front, with Señor Juan José Crotoggini as a substitute for General Seregni does not pretend to be in the running for the presidency with the Blancos and Colorados. But party insiders say they would be party insiders say they would be satisfied if they pull off an upset victory for the Montevideo mayoralty, something diplomatic observers say they might well do. With half the country's population of three million, Montevideo is a valuable political prize in itself, but the insiders say the Broad Front hopes to use it as a steppingstone to national power in the

Red Cross two Koreas From David Watts

Tokyo

The legacy of human misery left by two wars in the Korean peniusula may be partially alleviated soon with the agreement yesterday to reopen full-scale Red Cross talks between North and South Korea.

About 10 million Koreans, North and South, have been separated by war from relatives to whom the resumption of talks brings hope of being reunited or being able to visit the grave of a loved one.

Yesterday's meeting of Red Cross delegations from North and South was the first contact between the two organizations in seven years. They agreed to reopen discussions in Seoul but no definite date has been fixed. The two sides will agree a date by telephone. Yesterday South Korea proposed December 18 and North Korea proposed several degrees warmer. After last week's successful initial economic talks there were smiles and warm handshakes all round yesterday at the border truce village of Panmunjom. Mr Cho Chill Hwa, the chief delegate of South Korea, said the prevailing trend was for reconciliation across differing ideologies and systems.

Just as the talks of the early 1970s were aimed at reopening a dialogue which might lead to eventual reunification, so that hope was revived yesterday.

Recalling the acceptance by the South of flood relief aid from the North the chief Southern delegate went on: "Our recent acceptance of your side's offer of materials for flood victims was motivated by our wish to set a precedent for mutual help between members of the same nation, and with this as an impetus, to reopen the avenue of suspended dialogue and broaden the road to mutual cooperation in humantarian areas."

Once more the world is beating us at our own game.

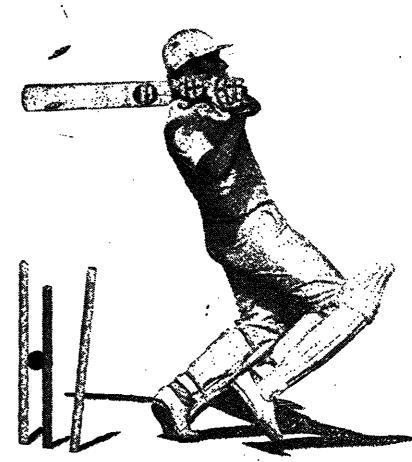

And it's not cricket.

After the war Britain was 3rd largest steel producer. Now we are 10th.

In 1900 Britain made 60% of the world's shipping. Today we make 3%.

Britain once exported motor bikes to over 100 countries. Now we import almost every machine we buy.

Before the War almost every car on our roads was British. Now well over half are foreign.

Britain pioneered the world machine tool industry.
Our share is now 3.1%.

Britain discovered the wireless. We now import 96% of our portable radios.

Britain made the first practical computer.
We now have only 5% of the Information Technology market.

We once made all the textile machinery in the world.
We now make 8%.

Last year Britain even imported 65% of our sports equipment. How's that!

Our ancestors were an inventive bunch.

They sparked off the Industrial Revolution, and won us rich markets all over the world.

And in their spare time they gave the world cricket, football, golf and tennis.

At first we beat all-comers, both in the factory and on the playing field. We took it for granted we always would.

But our competitors learned too well.

Of course it only hurts our national pride when our cricketers lose to New Zealand. (Never mind Australia, Pakistan or those brilliant West Indians.)

But it hurts our national pocket when our industries lose to Sweden. (Never mind Germany, Japan or the USA.)

Last year, for the first time in 200 years we imported more manufactured goods than we exported.

This is a critical situation, and The Engineering Council has been formed to help tackle it.

We have to ensure that more schoolchildren, girls as well as boys, understand the opportunities that engineering can offer.

We have to encourage universities and polytechnics to give engineering even more priority.

We need to impress the City and Parliament alike with the importance of our manufacturing industries, traditional as well as high technology.

And to encourage those same industries to invest more in training and competitive product innovation.

It's not an easy task.

But if we have the will to win, we fould once again be a match for anybody.

Diplomats say Mr Kinnock's talks with President Chernenko. Mr Mikhail Gorbachov, the Kremlin second-in-command, and other Soviet leaders, will provide clues to how far Russia is prepared to go to get arms talks with the West started again. Mr Chernenko hinted this week that he might meet Fresident Reagan at a summit. "postive results"

Bonn blazes trail to Warsaw

From Michael Binyon, Bonn

Herr Hans-Dietrich Geoscher, the West German Foreign Minister, begins a three-day visit to Poland today, the first by a Nato foreign minister since the lifting of martial law. The visit is intended as a signal by Bonn of the West's wish to restore normal relations and bring Poland out of its political isolation. In an effort to avoid the controversy which followed the visit to Warsaw by Mr Malcolm Riskind, the Minister of State at the Foreign Office. Herr Gen-scher will not hold any talks strategy. But unilateralism is a policy which, the Russians argue applies to others and not Father Jerzy Popieluszko, the priest murdered by Polish security agents. But he will doubtless express Bonn's con-cern in his talks with General Jaruzelski, the party leader, Mr Stefan Olszowski, the Foreign Minister, and Cardinal Glemp. the Roman Catholic Primate.

The visit, for which Herr Genscher has been pressing hard, was thrown into doubt last summer after accusations in Warsaw and Moscow of West German revanchism and the cancellation of visits here by Est German and Bulgarian leaders.

Herr Gescher is determined to keep open a dialogue with East Europe, however, and is preparing visits to Czechoslova-kia. Bulgaria, Hungary and Yugoslavia in the next months. On Monday, he requested a meeting with Mr Vladimir Semyonov, the Soviet Ambassador, at which he expressed Bonn's satisfaction at Soviet readiness to resume a dialogue with the United States and underlined the role European states could play by increasing

Threat of early Danish poll over UN vote

From Christopher Follett, Copenhagen

A political crisis is looming in Denmark after Mr Poul Schluter, the country's Con-servative Prime Minister. threatened to call early general elections over Denmark's Nato role and the defence and foreign policies of his minority centre-right administration.

The leftist majority in the influential parliamentary foreign policy committee, led by the Opposition Social Democrats, recommended yesterday that Denmark, which now holds a seat on the United Nations Security Council. should abstain from voting for a controversial draft resolution banning the first use of nuclear weapons globally.

The draft UN resolution tabled by Cuba, East Germany and Hungary, is considered "propagandist" by the Danish Government, which has given the country's UN delegation instructions to vote against it at its disarmament committee stage this week, in defiance of the majority in the Danish Parliament, but in line with the stance of all Denmark's Nato allies except Greece.

The first result of the Government's move was an Opposition call for a parliamentary debate

Mitterrand and Kohl pave way for US trip

From Diana Geddes Paris

The resumption of East-West arms talks and the enlargement of the European community were the main topics discussed by President Mitterrand of France and Chancellor Kohl of West Germany at their summit

Monday evening's meeting came 10 days before Herr Kohl's official visit to the United States and a fortnight before the European summit in Dublin on December 3 and 4. Chancellor Kohl has already met Mrs Margaret Thatcher, the British Prime Minister, and Signor Bettino Craxi, the Italian Prime Minister, to seek their views on East-West relations and thus present a coordinated European view to President Reagan next week.

At a joint press conference after a working dinner at the Elysee palace on Monday night, Herr Kohl said it was "important that the friends and allies of the United States say clearly that 1985 must be the year of negotiation".

President Reagan had achieved a brilliant victory at the polls and was in a good position to resume discussions with Moscow, he said. "It is important to seize every opportunity to open a serious negotiation with the Soviet Union. I am convinced that the right moment has now come."

Turning to European affairs, President Mitterrand and Chancellor Kohl reaffirmed their desire to see Spain and Portugal enter the Community by January I, 1986, although M Mitterrand emphasized the necessity first to examine the economic difficulties inherent in the enlargement of the EEC.

"It should be possible to find a compromise over a transition period of 10 years," M Mitterrand said.

Herr Kohl said it was essential to reach agreement on that question over the next two weeks because it would be "terrible for European politics if there was now a delay [to Spain and Portugal's entry] with unforesceable consequences.

Asked about the alleged Libyan plot to kill certain Western leaders, including those of France and West Germany, President Mitter-rand, who has come under severe criticism at home for agreeing to meet Colonel Gaddafi while Libyan troops were still in Chad, said with a dry for supplying the latest weapons smile: "if that happens, you will Leading article, page 19 be told."

Tamils kill 16 in raid on police station

Sixteen policemen were killed vesterday when Tamil separatist rebels in Sri Lanka's northern province launched a massive ttack on the police station at Chavakachcheri, about 10 miles from Jaffna. The rebels attacked the police station and its adjoining bar-racks with guns and bombs after placing roadblocks on approach roads. Police sources in Colombo said that army reinforcements sent to assist the police had encountered roadblocks and mines. The police loss of life was the heaviest in any single clash with the rebels. The previous worst loss of life among the armed services was when 13 soldiers were killed in a vehicle that was blown up by a landmine on July

Dr Wickrema Weerasooria, chairman of the media committee, disclosed last week that a total of 96 service personnel had been killed by rebels since 1977, consisting of 55 police, 34 army, four air force and three navy personnel.

On Monday a colonel was killed in a landmine explosion and with the death of the 16 policemen yesterday the total of service casualties rose to 113. The Government yesterday posthumously promoted the colonel killed on Monday to the rank of Brigadier.

Mr Lalith Athulathmudali, the Minister of National Security, yesterday called on the people to honour the Brigadier's memory by acting responsibly and with caution.

Plea to end hanging in Jamaica

By Colin Harding

Jamaica should drop the death penalty for murder, Amnesty International argues in a report published today. Hangings were resumed in 1980, after a four-year break, although a committee ap-pointed by Parliament was still examining the issue. Twentyfour prisoners have since been executed.

The committee, headed by a former judge of the Trinidad and Tobago Supreme Court, Mr H. Aubrey Fraser, subsequently recommended that the death penalty should be phased out and that all sentences imposed before March 1981 should be commuted to life imprison-ment. The committee said it could find no correlation between the crime rate and use of the death penalty.

A high rate of violent crime in Jamaica, including a large number of gang shootings, helps to account for the widespread popular support for hanging. But the Fraser Committee found little evidence that the death penalty had any deterrent value. Many of those sentenced to die were guilty of heat-of-themoment killings and had never before been convicted of any

Pan Am's New Clipper Class. The Million Dollar Experience.

One million dollars. That is how much we are spending on refurbishing each Pan Am 747.

Our objective was to make Pan Am Clipper® Class simply the best in the business.

To do this we set about totally redesigning it. In fact little of the old Clipper Class remains.

No longer is there, as with other airlines, one separate business cabin. The new Clipper Class has three. We thought that would give you more privacy.

Out With The Old, In With The New.

Then we threw out the eight-across seating. Now it's just six across. And, unlike other major transatlantic carriers, they are individual seats purpose-built for business class.

Out too go the overhead bins. Now Superbin comes to the rescue of travellers with large hand luggage. Six times bigger, these new bins can take suitcases standing or garment bags lying flat.

The film went the same way. Out. But movie buffs needn't worry, in its place is a brand new Sony video system.

However, Clipper doesn't just look better, it sounds better too, with the addition of new lightweight electronic headphones. So wherever you sit you'll have the best seat in the house.

A New Restaurant At 35,000 Ft.

When it's time for dining there's a whole new experience for you to enjoy. Separate courses served on real china. It's like stepping back in time to the gracious days of flying.

But the benefits of travelling Pan Am Clipper Class aren't all aboard the 747.

On arrival at the airport you go straight to your own separate check-in.

Speed Above The Traffic In A Free Pan Am Helicopter.

If you're going to New York there's a free helicopter from JFK to East 60th Street, Wall Street or Newark Airport. No other airline has its own helicopter service.

Meeting our evening New York flight is a free limousine to chauffeur you into Manhattan.

Both of these services leave from the same terminal, the one that you arrive at, our very own Pan Am Worldport.

Be sure to book one of them when you make your reservation.

Europe And America Under One Roof.

From Worldport you can also catch Pan Am flights all over America. It is the only terminal to have both international and internal U.S. flights all under the one roof.

Next time you fly to the States, fly Pan Am. After all, who else offers you, for the price of a business class ticket, a million dollar experience?

"We practise in a world very different from that of Wren, Inigo Jones, Soane and Palladio. We are no longer our own architectural masters."

Who then are the profession's architectural masters? The answer, of course, is predominantly the corporate and anonymous entities that exercise patronage today and reflect, for insurers; developers who put the agents; and government at all control. Patronage of this character has produced an age marked by a few good buildings but no great architecture.

Needless to say, the good are tarely speculative office blocks. Seifert attributes his success to hard work, dedication to his clients, a flexible approach and the need to keep pace with new materials and techniques leading to innevation through technology. Add to those factors e personal charm, an intimate knowledge of planning law, skilled negotiation with officials and a flair for coming

Although he is remroisiment of the Midland are banks, pension funds and anxious now to play down the Hotel, Manchester, and a influence of any one client, the rise and rise of the architect during the "Property Boom" phenomenon can be pinned down to, in Seifert's own words, "being in the right place at the right time". Seifert's lucky break came in the early 1950s; the place was Marylebone Road. When Seifert was in his early-40s the man who was to become his most important client was in his mid-20s. That client was Harry Hyams, who developed a speculative office block which became known as Woolworth House with his two partners, Jack Rose and Felix Fenston. Speculative office blocks for Hyams' empire were the bread and butter of the colorel's practice for the next 15 years. Woolworth House, completed in 1955 but unlet until four years later, is probably his building though noticeable by its absence from the exhibition. There followed Space House in Kingsway, Planet House in Baker Street, Centre Point, London Bridge House and Drapers Gardens, among the best known. The last of these was let to National Westminster Bank which, the colonel claims, led directly to the NatWest Tower commission. "A grateful client always comes back", he Hyams made £27m by the age of 39 largely thanks to the diligence of his principal architect; between 1955 and 1966 Seifert's practice grew from about 12 employees to about 200, with a turnover hovering around £25m a year, thanks to his developer's patronage. But if the practice stopped expanding with the 1974 property crash, then it also diversified into other types of work and into working abroad. An hotel in Turkey, a bank in Cairo, a bank headquarters in Lisbon, a marina in Mexico and a mixed commercial development in the United States are among current projects, as well as the proposed London's Docklands.

His son, John, aged 35, is being groomed to succeed him, but the firm today is seen very much as just one of many large, commercial architectural practices producing a particular product. But just as some lobbying is beginning to start for reappraisal of Sir Basil Spence's controversial career and contribution to architecture, so too Seifert has those, like Simon Jenkins, who say the current exhibition at the Heinz Gallery is the right opportunity to take another look.

The Times asked six architects and critics what had been the colonel's contribution, including John Harris, the curator who invited him in from the cold to the warmth of the RIBA's gallery. Though they have all been critical of his work in the past, significantly they all agree that he represents probably better than any other living architect the "spirit of the age". architecture of Colonel Seifert is likely to be judged on three issues: he was a success in giving his clients what they let him do it; his styles were derivative from contemporary movements, widely accept and often popular, at least with members of the public; and he was an innovator in construction techniques.

Like it or loathe it, history will probably be kinder to the colonel's architecture than his contemporaries. Some will never forgive him for what he has done to London, but he is right when he sees the era as part of an experimental process.

Architecture may never be the same again. But if Colonel Richard Seifert had never existed, surely he would have been invented as one of the profession's bogeymen. Like all reputations, time will be the major test of his legacy as the Architect of Pop.

architecture nothing like the real thing but can be an impressive operation. Speculative office building is second only to mass housing as the most prolific genre type this century. Yet it has no master-pieces, because, in my view, they are designed by developers' hack architects. Seifert is the doyen of these businessmen, the Wizard of the Plot Ratio and

Bomb Damage Grants. One cannot help but have a sneaking admiration for such an operator and indeed he was the first to import various ideas and styles from America. But his buildings chose always to be characterized by a lumpish insensitivity that has ruined our cities in the post-war years.

Not surprisingly in such a huge production there are some vicarious excitements; Space House in Kingsway and the Park Tower Hotel in Knightsbridge; and the black shiny Alfred Place and Euston Square are my favourites.

All his sub-Marcel Breuer buildings have a corn-on-the-cob character, if only they were edible (these include Space House and Centre Point). Since 1974 Seifert has recanted. His views have changed on high-rise housing and he has changed from Modernism to Post-Modernism and that should be welcomed. His schemes now are better scaled and more fitting. But it's time he made the next step and recanted again on high-vel-ocity architecture in general; or else broke up his mega-com-missions and shared them with good, under-worked designers. # The gas people-investing in tomorrow's world today

The fact that gas is such good value makes it today's most popular fuel in British homes - and gaorce in moustry, too. This is no accident? It's the result of many years' foresight, planning and massive investment by British Gas on behalf of their customers.

The gas people are still working for the future: planning, researching and investing to meet Britain's energy needs a further twenty years ahead, and more.

NEW £100 MILLION OFFSHORE SEARCH GOES DEEPER

This year we've been drilling in deeper water than ever before in our continuing search for the further supplies of gas which lie buried under the seas around Britain.

Eight rigs are being? used for a mixture of exploration, appraisal and development wells: in areas as far apart as the English Channel and the Shetlands. A promising gas find has already been made off the Shetlands in extremely. deep water — the sea bed is 2000 feet down!

BILLION POUND DEVELOPMENT IN MORECAMBE BAY

One of the most important finds. made by the gas people is in More cambe Bay off Lancashire.

The Morecambe gas field lies about 26 miles offshore from Blackpool and, with an estimated 5 trillion cubic feet of gas in reserve is one of Britain's largest offshore gas fields.

Its ongoing development represents a billion. pound investment by British Gas in Britain's future - and provides 1 thousands of jobs now for British workers.

One great advantage. of the Morecambe field is that it belongs to British Gas. This means that output can more easily be controlled to help ensure in cold winter weather that customers' needs for gas are met.

Demand for gas at such times can be up to six times greater than in summer.

HOW THE GAS PEOPLE ARE PUTTING SOMETHING AWAY FOR A RAINY DAY

Another ingenious and massive development which will help cope efficiently with winter demand is taking place in the partially depleted Rough gas field in the North Sea. Gas will be pumped into the field in the summer, and stored there till needed.

When fully operational, this £600 million development will be capable of supplying a billion cubic feet of gas a day at periods of peak demand — more than seven times the original output of the field.

GIANT CELLARS 'SALT' AWAY GAS

Deep under rural North Humberside, British Gas engineers are now using salt cavities to store gas against heavy winter demand.

Three of these giant salt cellars. a mile underground, are already in service and work is going ahead on four more.

Each holds a billion cubic feet of gas, equivalent to all the gas used in Britain each day before the North Sea discoveries.

With 8 million central heating customers and 14 million with gas fires, the gas people have to be fully prepared not only for next winter, but for the one after that, and so on.

Such projects are just part of British Gas' massive integrated investment plans to provide for Britain's future energy needs.

These plans for tomorrow are only possible because the profits British Gas creates today are all ploughed back into the business.

This also brings benefits in the form of contracts for British firms for drilling platforms, pipelines, onshore terminals and all the associated engineering plant and equipment. That means the creation of many thousands of jobs for British workers - a productive boost for local communities and the national economy.

But what distinguishes Bartel from his more crassly-inclined col-leagues, and has helped secure him a substantial cult reputation, is his knack of portraying the worst excesses of human behaviour with a good deal of wit and charm, thus defusing any impulse towards moral

How Esso intend completing the picture

The new Esso-Shell gas liquids fractionation plant at Mossmorran in Fife is open for business. It took over £500 million and 5 years of ingenuity and skill to build.

Mossmorran is only one part of a £1,700 million development programme which started 13 years ago with the discovery of the Brent oil and gas field.

Natural gas and its associated liquids are carried 278 miles by undersea pipeline from Brent and other fields in the North Sea to St. Fergus in Scotland.

There the natural gas is separated from the liquids, piped into the national gas grid, and is now supplying 10% of Britain's gas for industry and the home.

The natural gas liquids then travel a further 138 miles by underground pipeline to Mossmorran. Here they are separated into their commercial components: propane, butane, natural gasoline and ethane.

Esso are now completing the picture by building a £400 million ethane cracker, linked to the Mossmorran complex. This cracker will be the most technologically advanced in Europe, and will produce ethylene, the basic raw material for plastics.

This investment in all our futures is just one demonstration of Esso's continuing confidence and commitment to Britain.

But the work doesn't finish here. Esso are currently spending at the rate of £2,000 per minute, over 85% of it going to British firms.

Between now and 1990 we expect to invest another £4,500,000,000 to meet Britain's energy needs—a massive commitment which offers opportunities for the development of new technologies, the building of new industries, and the creation of new jobs.

Esso look forward with confidence to providing supplies of oil and gas for Britain well into the 21st century.

favourable impact on its privatiza-

The Americans offered to sugar the pill with a number of compromises which, they argued, would reduce the impact of the impending prosecution against BA on the civil action. But these overtures were rejected by the British, forcing President Reagan himself to come to

While diplomats on both sides are clearly relieved, the president's action raises uncomfortable legal and commercial precedents.

Earlier US District Court Judge Harold Greene, who has robustly presided over the pre-trial hearings in the civil case, had already expressed his concern for the future vitality of US anti-trust laws. And British officials have expressed their worries in private about the damage caused to the Government's reputation as a champion of free

The substance of the welter of charge and counter-charge goes back to the autumn of 1981, when Sir Freddie Laker's cut-price Laker Airways, riding high since the launch of the immensely popular Skytrain in 1977, came under severe competitive pressure. But the principles and the contradictions go back the beginnings of mass transatlantic travel just after the Second World War.

The original Bermuda agreement of 1946 attempted to square the American desire for free competition and the European concern for price stability. The potential - and sometimes actual - conflict was never fully reconciled, and surfaced in recent discussions between the Americans and the British.

The British argued that if they felt BA had acted illegally in fixing fares, the United States had a recourse only under the Bermuda Treaty, as amended in 1980. The Americans considered that while their anti-trust another alleged price-fixing con-

Washington also appears to have had considerable choice over what charges to throw at BA. The Justice Department's inquiry was triggered by allegations by the Laker liquidator that Laker had been driven out of business as the result of "predatory" price cutting by BA. Pan Am and others in November, 1981, three months before the crash.

The events of that autumn are now well known. On October 8, Pan Am declared virtual war on Laker by announcing that as from November l it was going to cut its regular transatlantic fare by 64 per cent to match Laker's prices dollar for Pan Am's chief executive, William Waltrip, spoke frankly about his motives. "We have put the fares down to make sure the competition understands that there are not going to be any niches for them any more. If they understand what the competitive market place is ging to be, I think the rates will go up.

Laker was not mentioned by name but it was obvious who he had in mind. Pan Am's lead was immediately followed by TWA and British Airways.

It took some weeks for the effects of the airline's pre-emptive strike to become apparent. But when Laker's November figures came in they were terrible: Laker's business on the North Atlantic had been cut by more compared with the ver before. The bussiness was sliding out of control.

Though these events are still at the heart of the civil case they did not, apparently, figure large in the US Department of Justice's action. The department had uncovered spiracy dating back to 1978. There is ample evidence, it is claimed, to show that British Airways conspired both with US airlines and curiously with Laker itself to fix prices and charge BA vigorously denies.

offered to raise fares between London and New York provided price differential between themselves and Skytrain. The full details of this episode will now probably never be revealed.

Whether the truth is ever revealed

President Reagan has over-ruled his Justice Department, opened himself to the charge of weakening the deterrent effect of America's anti-trust legislation, and, it can be argued, put the interests of the British Exchequer above those of his own consumers.

In return, he has bought himself a more peaceful meeting with Mrs Thatcher. Two of his key advisers have argued that unless this issue was resolved, the meeting should not go ahead.

There the matter rests, at any rate until I have turned my attention to the other cases I am considering this morning, that of the Morgans of Tewkesbury, ci-devant Betws, and the McKays of No Fixed Abode.

Mr Morgan is a miner who, having been on strike, returned to work, and was then promptly subjected to the attentions of Mr Scargill's tontons macoutes until, as he puts it, explaining his move to. Tewkesbury: "I've been driven out by the bully boys - there's nothing left for us in Betws now."

As for Mr McKay, he has publicly criticized Mr Scargill and his leadership of the strike; even before that, he was a marked man, for behas also been publicly critical of the Soviet Union, and more particularly he actively supported the attempts. by two Soviet miners (Mr Klebanov and the late Mr Nikitin) who were put respectively in a madhouse and a concentration camp for trying to husband, to obscene telephone calls start a miners' union in their and to the receipt of such items as country. (The NUM abandoned them to their fate.) He has now had to leave his home, also for an unknown destination, having become afraid for the safety of his wife, after a gang of Mr Scargill's bootboys gathered outside it for an evening's intimidation.

Mr Rodney Bickerstaffe, Secretary of Nupc, has recently been making something of a reputation for himself as a humorous fellow - tres card, presque wag; he had the TUC conference in stitches. Possibly – one cannot tell – he finds the tale of Mrs and Mr Adams amusing (or not. as the case might be). As for Mr Scargill, if past form is anything of a guide, he will argue simultaneously that nothing untoward happened to the Morgans or the McKays and that it was quite right that it did:

My conclusion will be a fairly obvious one; in case it is not obvious enough. I must add one further tiny detail about the Morgans' move, which seems to apply also to that of the McKays. They have not just moved; they have moved to a secret address. Evidently, they fear that the arm of vengeance is long, and those of you who are inclined to dismiss such fears as baseless should first reflect that they are likely to know more about the subject than you do.

We have, I think, come quite a long way in quite a short time. When, the other day, Mr Adam Butler drew a mild and tentative comparison between the attitudes of the IRA and those of the kind of miners who have driven the Morgans into hiding. Mr Gerald Kaufman was predictably quick to denounce the suggestion as slander. (I can forgive Mr Kaufman - a witty and genuinely likeable rogue - a great deal, but not stupidity, for so shrewd a politician ought to know that the fascist left in his constituency will have him out, if they can muster or rig the votes, whatever he says or does; he could tomorrow announce his simultaneous adherence to the Militant Tendency, the SWP, Vanessa's Loonies and the Warsaw Pact without in any way softening his enemies' determi- judges in politics has been postponed.

nation to replace him by one of their own number.)

The miners' leaders do not practise murder (though it is worth remembering that Colonel Gaddafi does), so the scale of what they do is very different, not that Mr Butler suggested otherwise.

The principle is the same; neither the IRA nor Mr Scargill can win by the methods of argument, convic-tion and votes, so both demand the right to attain their equally undemocratic ends by force. It is much worse to blow people up with bombs than to smash their windows, spit upon their children, daub their houses with obscenities and put them, night and day, in fear. But great though the difference is, it is still the difference between a large horse and a small horse, not a horse and a cow.

Large and small, the horses have got loose, and are galloping about Britain. They had better be corralled soon. For a clearer demonstration of the Government's intention to corral them, I have a suggestion for the Prime Minister. The George Cross is awarded to civilians (or to the fighting services in circumstances where military honours are not appropriate) for acts of great heroism, or of the most conspicuous courage in circumstances of extreme danger". My reading of the citation suggests that the award is not necessarily confined to time of war. and even if that view is wrong, a comparatively simple amendment would extend the honour appropriately. We have already had many examples of heroism and conspicuous courage in circumstances of extreme danger, and we are likely to have many more, on the new battlefields where the forces of law and the ranks of those unwilling to be conscripted into union armies of violence and intimidation meet "the enemy within". Let Mrs Thatcher single out someone whose courage in that struggle is above the ordinary - perhaps a picket-line policeman ambushed and beaten up, perhaps a miner willing to run the gauntlet of missiles and burning cars, perhaps one of those who have had to endure what Mrs Adams endured for a year and recommend the George Cross for such a hero or heroine. If she could simultaneously suggest the same decoration for someone who

Where is the ballot on Tory funds?

In the 13 months following next March every trade union affiliated to the Labour Party is obliged to ballot its members on whether to maintain a political fund for this or any other purpose. Much effort has been devoted by ministers to dressing up the motivation behind this new legal requirement as an innocent desire to extend democracy. They have set an electoral challenge which the Labour movement must now take up with enthusiasm. But we can be forgiven for pausing first to ask why the Government which is imposing democracy on trade unions is not granting the same democratic rights to shareholders.

In the past year nearly 400 companies have reported donations to the Conservative Party totalling almost £3m. Of this generous tribute the only sum paid subject to a ballot was the modest £700 donated by Aidcom International, which showed a commendable if lonely commitment to consultation by polling its employees about how £1.500 set aside for political donations should be distributed.

Nobody appears to have polled

This bleak record of rule from the boardroom raises intriguing ques-tions. Would it not accord more with the philosophy which the present Chancellor applies to cor-porate expenditure if directors were to avoid any such deduction in order that there might be a higher dividend to widen the freedom of shareholders to choose whether to make a personal donation? Might there not be the hint of a conflict of interest between directors and shareholders, in the suspicious congruence between the companies who dominate the table of donations to the Conservative Party and the directors who have dominated the Honours List under this Govern-

The absence of shareholders' rights is all the more striking given that a third of all shares are held by pension funds acting on the savings of a wide cross-section of the public. It is highly probable that not every contributor to a pension fund is a committed Tory supporter, but that is the only political party supported to any significant degree by deduc-tions from their dividends.

Even the miners find themselves contributing indirectly to this involuntary levy. A slice of the NCB pension fund is placed with Lake View Investment Trust which last year concluded that the political interests of its members were best served by contributing £3,000 to the Conservative Party. An enterprising attempt to assert the rights of shareholders over such largesse has been initiated by the Trustees of Gwent Council Superannuation Fund. They wrote to all companies in which they held shares and which had declared a political donation, challenging the decision.

The stapled volume of replies hardly adds up to a coherent case for denying the shareholders a ballor Many merely assert the legal prerogative of the directors. Hambros states baldly that "the board reserves the right to act in accordance with its views". The Sedgwick Group states that this is "not a matter in which shareholders can be involved", and adds "I am sure you will hopefully. understand this general principle.

Others respond that if the trustees do not like the donations they can take their savings elsewhere: the RMC Group suggests bluntly that the trustees "should have the courage of your convictions and dispose of your holding".

Willis Faber, which now donates £40,000 to the Conservative Party. took the trouble to calculate the portion referable to Gwent's holding and concluded that it had contributed £60 to Tory funds, adding that your pensioners have had a very very good value for this expenditure". Given what can be ascer-tained about the voting habits of Gwent pensioners from election results, it is by no means obvious that this assertion would command universal support in the valleys.

Let us translate these replies into a trade union context. Suppose any trade union had responded to such a query from a member by advising him that the purposes of the political fund was "not a matter in which members can be involved", or telling him that he "should have the courage of your convictions and dispose of your membership". Then imagine the explosion of indignant outrage with which the present Government would denounce such an offence to its democratic convictions.

We are staring at a double standard as broad as any dual carriageway. Company directors may continue to fork out donations to the Conservative Party without any further consultation, and without any of the disenfranchised shareholders enjoying the right to contract out. Trade unions may only subscribe to Labour subject to periodic ballots, with the defeated minority properly retaining the right to opt out of the political contributions for which the majority has voted. No consistent argument of democratic principle can reconcile such a contrast. It can only be explained by partisan prejudice.

Not so long ago, under the last Labour government, Nicholas Ridley opposed a Bill brought in by a Labour backbencher to regulate company donations with the lofty rebuke that "It ill behoves the honourable gentlemen to seek to win political battles by seeking to reduce the funds made available to his political opponents". Today Nicholas Ridley sits in a Cabinet which seeks to do just that.

A tax revolution to help the poor

Ten years ago, a group of young men middle income groups benefit were grumbling about the level of disproportionately not only as taxation. One of them cut the others short. He was pleased to pay his taxes. He recognized his obligation to help those less fortunate than himself and was grateful for this opportunity to fulfil it. They were duly humbled as, I suspect, he had

No doubt he is still doing his party piece and adding that popular chorus about the poor getting poorer under monetarism or under Thatcher. All the more reason to be grateful for the opportunity to pay his taxes and help the poorer poor.

However it has become clear that the superior young man's judgement is wrong and his generosity culpably misdirected. The current bout of assertions about the increasing divide between rich and poor is based on the recent Inland Revenue Statistics, 1984. This publication used to be prefaced by a warning that the figures should not be used to make crude assertions about wealth distribution. Not only are they inadequate for this purpose but there are no statistics giving direct information on wealth distribution. The crude assertions also refine an old logical fallacy, Sub Thatcher Ergo Propter Thatcher.

Whatever the doubts about the extent of the distance between rich and poor, there is little doubt that the young man's assumption that the tax-welfare system is the obvious way to reduce it, is unwarranted. Insofar as the poor are poor, they are poor "under" the welfare state. Inasmuch as their disadvantage is persistent, it persists "within" a welfare system supposed to reduce and curtail it. Moreover, it appears that the poor do poorly from the very welfare services designed to give them equal access and reduce their relative poverty.

Next to no increase in social mobility has resulted from progressive educational reforms. Higher education redistributes funds from poorer tax payers to the offspring of richer tax payers through grants - a scandal finally given notice by Sir Keith Joseph last week. This gives middle class" students disproportionate advantages in employment.

Who does not now know how middle and upper income groups have profited from Housing Improvement Grants? And although the NHS does not discriminate so markedly against the poor, they receive less help proportionate to their greater incidence of ill-health.

Throughout the "kind" as onposed to the "cash" welfare state, consumers but producers. They are employed and paid - often well - by state education, health and welfare.

Survey research by Peter Taylor-Gooby shows that lower income groups are aware of this inequity. They "see higher income families as getting the best value from taxes from the NHS, education and state pensions". They would agree with another social policy analyst, Julian Le Grand that "the strategy of attempting to create equality through the provision of services that are free, or at a subsidized price to all, seems fundamentally misconceived".

This scandalous failure implies different policy changes according to different analyses of its causes. But forget, for a moment, the polices and politicians. What conclusion should the charitable young man draw? What should we do to discharge our obligation to those less fortunate than ourselves now we know the state cannot adequately, or efficiently discharge that obligation

To accept again responsibility to be directly involved in others' welfare involves a reconstruction of non-governmental welfare. But. splendid though the WRVS, Abbeyfield and the NSPCC are, the voluntary sector is not adequately funded. Moreover, some less familiar organizations resemble state services, perhaps because they are heavily dependent on state grants (voluntary giving has actually fallen since 1974). Not a few are radicalized and dutifully intone the trade union line that they cannot replace "full-time, state services. properly staffed, trained and paid". The line culminates in the organiza-tion which does nothing directly to help the poor, confining itself to lobbying for increased government action.

The recognition that the welfare state has failed suggests that voluntary services should not ape state services and may have a much more than residual rôle to play. This will require fiscal changes perhaps along the American line of a "Standard Deduction" (US individuals give five to ten times more than UK individuals, allowing for higher per capita income) or one-year covenants. Revenue losses should be offset by reductions in spending on nationalized welfare. Is this the sort of moral revolution Lord Stockton had in mind, with individuals accepting their responsibility for first hand and effective care of others? The author is Director of the Social

FAREWELL TO THE FORUM

Dublin was busy reducing expectations of the prime ministers' meeting in the days preceding it. Wisely as it turned out. Nothing concrete emerged in respect of security or political structures. The communique was a regurgitation of bits of earlier communiques. The crispest thing about the day's events was Mrs Thatcher's dismissal of the three models considered by the New Ireland Forum, a unitary all-Ireland state, a federal Irish state, and "joint authority" by which Dublin and London would together administer the province. These options had, in reality, already been disqualified for want of satisfying the forum's own requirement of unionist consent - and in the case of joint some similarity of approach. authority by reason of its manifest impracticality.

Dr FitzGerald returned to Dublin uncomfortably exposed to the taunts of Mr Haughey, who takes the simple view in opposition that the only thing worth going for is a unitary Irish republic, that the only way to get there is via a round-table conference of all concerned, and that Dr FitzGerald's "any other business" uses with the forum report are not only futile but a betrayal of the cause. Similarly Mr John Hume in Northern Ireland is still left without fresh evidence that constitutional nationalism can deliver anything, and without any new riposte to Sinn Fein's contention that the only argument the British understand is the argument of force. It is politically embarrassing for both men, who invested so much in the forum, that things have not gone forward further faster. They have the consolation that the possibilities are not yet the unionists will simultaneously exhausted, though anything that walk out of. There is no gain to comes out will plainly be less than Dublin would like for domestic consumption as regards both north-south linkage and the Dublin government's desire to be granted some locus standi within the province. They also have the satisfaction of knowing that the analysis of Northern Ireland's disorders offered in the forum report is endorsed by the British government to a significant extent. That was a feature of the discussions at Chequers that Dr FitzGerald picked out as boding well; what had been for so long a matter of contention between the two governments was beginning to present itself as a subject for joint consideration based on

Forumese, the characteristic form of expression for that analysis, found its way into the communiqué:

The identities of both the majority and the minority communities in Northern Ireland should be recognized and respected, and reflected in the structures and processes of Northern Ireland in ways acceptable to both com-

The last phrase, taken with Mrs Thatcher's iteration at her press conference that she is not seeking to impose a solution on Northern Ireland, reads like a recipe for paralysis, more work for the Ulster veto. Yet at one level it is just common sense. If the objective includes the process of reconciliation between the two communities and the provision of workable insti-tutions through which to achieve it, it is no use handing down a system of subordinate provincial government into which the nationalists will walk if it is one security in the province from imposing a framework for policing and the administration of justice capable of winning the confidence of nationalists if its appearance rouses unionists to the belief that the union is about to be violated.

Mr Douglas Hurd is beginning the next phase by calling on the Northern Ireland parties to talk devolution again with each other. If it is just left to them the upshot will indeed be nothing. The sovereign responsibility of the British government in Northern Ireland obliges it to further the process by persuading, pushing and inventing.

No lurch in policy is required or appropriate. What is needed is steady pressure through careful diplomacy of the several purposes of British policy already in place: the integrity of the union until such time as a majority in Northern Ireland wishes it to be dissolved; practical encouragement for the minority to make more positive identification with the institutions of the province, not least its law enforcement agencies; enlargement of the sphere of local and provincial self-government; cultivation of close and constructive relations with the Republic: extermination of the republican terrorism and counter-terrorism which provoke each other.

The last purpose, especially in so far as it calls for joint of crossborder security operations, will be best assisted by progress with the others. That is part of the legitimate ground of Dublin's interest in the condition of Northern Ireland. The fear and enmity with which the Irish government regards the Provisional IRA is not in doubt, its capacity to root it out may be.

INDIA'S CHOICES

With the dissolution of the Lok Sabha announced yesterday in New Delhi, India is once again preparing for parliamentary elec-tions. On December 24 the world's largest democracy will go to the polls. It will be the eighth such exercise since Independence in 1947; and the election announcement just two weeks after Mrs Gandhi's assassination is convincing affirmation of the country's firm democratic cre-

Yet for India's electorate of 400 million citizens the choice on offer has never been so bleak or so baffling. As they stand today both the ruling Congress-I (Indira) and the many oppo-sition parties have little to end of her 18 month emergency, recommend them. In Indian eyes the Congress Party is associated with the erosion of political morality so evident in the country. Over the past five years not even last two years. relations with the twenty-two State governments that comprise the Indian Federation make this unequivocally clear. Shortly after them as Prime Minister. Even Congress won the 1980 election today they cannot agree, alit sought to purchase its way to power in two states, Haryana and Himmachal Pradesh, by financing defections to make up a shortfall the results had left behind. The Congress gain was India's loss.

More recently, this summer, the Indian voters saw the same party effectively engineer the ments in Kashmir and Sikkim; a right to expect more from their and when it tried the same in politicians before any one party Andhra Pradesh the sums on offer were as high as £150,000 There is obviously great symper legislator. This month, as violence spreads through India in the wake of Mrs Gandhi's murder, Congress added the stain of Congress Party members were vote. widely reported to have encouraged the rioters, abetting arson while hindering police action. The Indian papers have named at least three Congress Members of Parliament who were identified in the mob.

For its part the opposition has hardly proved itself any better. In 1977, when Mrs Gandhi suffered a humiliating defeat five Opposition parties collectively won a mandate to rule India. It was to be the second dawn after Independence. It did

By 1979 the government had crumbled as the parties fell apart over the issue of who should lead though the process has justifiably shown up the Opposition leaders as selfish and tired old men. And now with Mrs Gandhi's death their obsession to oust her which could have glued them together once again has disappeared. In her death they have lost their

As he showed in 1977 and 1980 when the ruling party was relentlessly removed, the Indian personal involvement to its voter has the canniness to wait record of political malfeasance. and see which party will earn his

> To prove his party worthy, Rajiv Gandhi must ensure that the politicians he runs on the Congress ticket are of a new breed. The hacks his mother sponsored deserve to be dropped. Only then will a grudging respect for politicians return. At the same time, to prove his own sincerity and to reassure the country that justice will always be done. Mr Gandhi also needs to see that his own party men are prosecuted for their role in this month's riots just as severely as he is pursuing the suspected conspirators behind his mother's brutal assassination.

The Opposition have a harder task to win popular approval. They must show they are capable of placing the national need for a united and stable opposition before their own personal desires for preference and leadership. More than that, having lost Mrs Gandhi as a target they must now find issues and policies they can place in front of the electorate to supplant the old obsession with personalities. If they succeed in this and yet lose the election, the Opposition may at least be able to claim they had won the argument and arguments which are soundly based eventually win the day.

LIFE-BLOOD, OR DEATH?

To the infection known as Aids, of retribution for a questionable may soon eliminate the risk of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, attaches a peculiar horror, corrosive and atavistic. After events in Australia and deaths here, the public health authorities must be seen to move swiftly to protect not only supplies of plasma and blood products used in treating disease and injury but, more important still for the longer run, to sustain the unique trust that links blood donors, medical professionals and patients. Statements to date contact with, say, malaria is not by under-secretaries and promiscs of leaflets are, it has to be said, insufficient. Some robust announcement by the Secretary of State for Social Services based solidly on a defensive plan for the National Blood Transfusion Service is the least that can be expected, and quickly.

of the prognosis for its victims. The infection's origins and means of propagation excites repugnance, moral and physical, at promiscuous male homosexuality - conduct which, tolerable in private circumstances, has with the advent of "gay liberation" become advertised, even glorified as acceptable public conduct, even a proud badge for public men to wear. Many members of the public are the purity of certain blood tempted to see in Aids some sort products. Screening techniques person's first tasks.

style of life but Aids of course is a danger not only to the promiscuous nor only to homosexuals. A fascinating medical detective work suggests that the infection's origins may be tropical. It follows that procedures for detecting potential carriers of Aids can be modelled on the tests the National Heath Service's blood collectors now apply to tropical diseases. To ask a donor of blood for details of reckoned to infringe civil liberties - nor should it be to question men succinctly about their sexual dealings. The object of the exercise is not punitive. Blood for others' use is a precious gift: the object of policy ought to be to stimulate not extinguish the subtle motives Aids horrifies not only because of fellow feeling which brings people to the transfusion service's draughty halls and mobile centres. The service, creaking on its 1940s foundations and buffeted by the rancour of trade unions which would deprive patients in private health care of donated blood, will suffer from the loss of > donors. Technology is advancing. Heat treatment may guarantee

contracting Aids through transfused blood and there must be urgency about making Britain independent of supplies from other countries where the prospect of profit creates greater incentive for donors to conceal the truth.

Until then, policy should proceed on two fronts. Strict questioning of donors and the rigorous exclusion of all practising homosexuals should be enjoined on the collectors of blood. In Queensland measures have been taken to fine and imprison those giving blood without disclosing their homosexual experience. Such a step, a drastic response to public outrage, may be too much for Britain but anticipatory thinking along such lines within the Department of Health and Social Security is surely needed. More positively, the Blood Transfusion Service has long been in need of some public relations revamping together with sharper management. Mr Fowler is about to make his long-awaited appointment of a super-manager for the NHS: let a programme of administrative reformation and public education for the transfusion service be one of that

Looking afresh at technology

From the Principal and Vice-Chan-cellor of Edinburgh University Sir, To date there has been little, if any, public comment on your any, public comment on your contributor's enthusiastic welcome (October 30) for the proposed Institute of Information Tech-nology. While all concerned with the promotion of information tech-nology in Britain must welcome wholeheartedly the generous reported commitment of industrial sponsors to over £10m of backing, it has to be asked whether the objective is not at best misguided (if not, indeed, unnecessary and Information technology is not a subject, but rather a range of integrated activities based on electrical engineering, computer science and artificial intelligence, and relying heavily on a sound basis of mathematics, physics and logic, plus other cognate applied disciplines.

Only a few universities in Britain, as a result of their own initiative and the selective support of SERC (Science and Engineering Research Council), and, more recently, the Alvey Directorate, have developed high expertise in all these areas, although a larger number of universities and some polytechnics have similar expertise on a narrower

Without exception the development of all these institutions is at present limited by shortage of funds needed both for research and to overcome all the problems set out in the first report of the Butcher committee. These are, basically, scarce, experienced and potentially expensive staff, the essential back-up modern "state of the art" equipment; and, in some cases, the need to extend existing accommodation.

At a time of great financial exigency in higher education it would surely be wiser to build on existing centres of excellence, thereby promoting both training and research, rather than to dissipate such limited funds as are available on establishing a green field site which, inevitably, will have to duplicate expensive facilities already existing elsewhere.

It needs also to be asked whether the proposed institute could, indeed, train the projected student numbers on the time scale suggested or, in any event, more rapidly than by supporting existing centres.

Moreover, looking to the future, it is self-evident that the basic sciences and technologies on which information technology undoubtedly depends will also be needed for a range of other diverse developments. Yet the information technology institute now proposed will rest on a narrow intellectual base, serving only an immediate

It seems a pity, therefore, to perpetuate such a Contrary to popular belief a rating pattern when a similar expenditure revaluation does not, by itself, cause could be used to build more economically and as effectively on existing strengths.

A word for murder

From Mr Michael Beaumont

Sir, Bombings and murders in Northern Ireland, Brighton and Delhi show up weaknesses not only in security but in the English language. These attacks are often described as "cowardly", yet this form of cowardice differs in kind from that of the soldier who avoids action through fear.

The archaic "poltroon" may be better suited to someone who takes dastardly action against defenceless people. But to describe IRA thugs or Sikh bodyguards as poltroons is absurd. Alas and increasingly we need a new word. Yours faithfully,

Famine in Ethiopia

From Dr Mervyn Hiskett

Sir. It seems instructive to contrast the present unhappy situation in Ethiopia with that in Nigeria, for although a vast area of Nigeria lies within the same climatic and ecological belt as Ethiopia, Nigeria has none the less avoided, not once. but on several occasions, the catastrophic famines that have afflicted its neighbours.

There are no doubt many and complex reasons for this, but one certainly seems to be that, despite formidable political and economic problems. Nigerian governments. whether military or civil, have shown a greater sense of responsibility and foresight in the matter of agricultural development than has ductivity of the Nigerian Sahel today

Mr Gummer and the bishops' gambit

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

From Sir David Lane

Sir, As a friend and fellow-member of the Church of England and the Conservative Party, I am sad to read (report, November 19) of Mr John Gummer apparently joining in the chorus of rather petulant attacks on Church leaders by other Conserva-tives in recent weeks.

Of course Church leaders should speak with a sense of responsibility and with respect for the facts, like everyone taking part in public debates, including politicians. I do not myself agree with all that archbishops and bishops have been saying; some of the remarks of the Bishop of Durham, in particular, have been ill-judged and unhelpful. But I hope that John Gummer is not seeking to restrict the contribution of Church leaders to public debate. Surely they are just as entitled to comment on current issues from their particular spiritual standpoint as, say, scientists from theirs. After all, the archbishops and a number of bishops are ex-officio members of the House of Lords. What, I wonder, does John Gummer mean by alleging that "too many of the Churchs current pronouncements" have neglected the requirement that choices be made "with the claims of the Gospel clearly in mind"? Reconciliation, for example, is an important part of the Gospel; has not the Church a valuable contribution to make especially at a time when divisions in our society are so acute? The Archbishop of Canterbury's general comments early last month, in his interview with your Correspondent, were timely and telling. The present level of unemployment - a specific topic of recent episcopal pronouncements - does damage to the spirit in many individual cases and must be a concern of Church leaders.

Bishop Tutu said today on radio, "If God's writ does not run in the political sphere, whose writ does?"

consequences. Following that year's general election Mrs Thatcher, in line with the precedent set by Mr Heath, scrapped a separate Ministry of Overseas Development and placed official overseas aid in the charge of a junior FCO minister. Previously -Mr Heath's premiership apart - the separate and relatively senior ministerial responsibility for HMG's overseas aid programme had enabled those in charge to argue strongly for perceived needs and to take any case for additional

Local mines

From Mr Richard Tamplin and Lord McNair Sir, May we, as two of the "well-

Albert Howells, seems to suggest that we oppose all coal mining in the Forest, but this is not true. We gave evidence to the recent Opencast Coal Inquiry that small drift mines, such as Freeminers have sunk for centuries, are very much needed to provide jobs and fuel for local needs.

We do not, and would never, oppose that tradition; what we do oppose is the systematic destruction of the Forest by giant multinational

Cambridge. November 19. From Dr A. C. Todd ... Sir, Further to your excellent and timely leader of November 17, "The bishops' gambit," I suggest that the bishops and all other spiritual leaders should now add to their daily private prayers this one of Thomas a Kempis:

"I beseech Thee, my most Gracious preserve me from the cares of this lest I should be too much entangled therein." Yours sincerely, A. C. TODD, No I Raford House, 49 Kenilworth Road, Learnington Spa, Warwickshire. November 18.

From Dr.A. J. Bate Sir, A Sunday evening sermon in a university church should surely be preached from the university pulpit on a Sunday evening, not released in advance to the press through Conservative Central Office.

Mr Gummer was not invited to Cambridge to make a political speech; his opportunistic abuse of the pulpit is such that he is hardly qualified to upbraid the bishops. Yours faithfully,

From the President of the Rating and

Valuation Association and others

Sir, No system of taxation can operate fairly and equitably if the assessments are not kept regularly and frequently up to date. A particularly bad example of this is the persistent refusal to sanction a revaluation of property for local rates in England and Wales, although the equivalent exercise has been authorised in Scotland and will come into effect next year.

Values have shifted significantly

Contrary to popular belief a rating rates to rise. It merely adjusts the burden and thus promotes fairness between ratepayers so that some pay more than previously whereas others pay less. The adjustment process is, however, related impar-

Sir Geoffrey Howe's responsi-bilities as Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary mean that he (and anyone else in that office dealing inter alia with overseas aid) is nearly always likely to find himself having to establish the level for overseas aid with regard to other economies which may be forced on him in relation to the costs of other services such as Britain's overseas representation and the British Council.

Hence the harsher deal which overseas aid annual budgets appear to have suffered over the last five years if considered against the levels projected for all public-expenditure programmes in the last White Paper published under the Labour Government. Yours faithfully,

Too much trust in mineral trading

From the Director of the Strategic Metals Corporation

Sir. The Government's decision to abandon its newly formed strategic minerals stockpile says as much about our masochistic attitude towards commodity trading as it does about our Munich-like faith in the eternal goodness of man. We are, as a nation, the centre of much of the world's mineral trading in all its forms. Sadly we are no nger the warehouse. We allowed that role to be whipped away to Rotterdam in the late 1950s through our failure to comprehend the free port principle and our refusal to accept containerization as a way of

For what is left of our industry we rely increasingly upon the appli-cation of technology and the specialised minerals it demands. In spite of ranking seventh in the world in monetary value of mining and minerals output, we produce scarcely any of those vital to the realization of our skills: no bismuth, chrome, cobalt, manganese, plati-num groups, titanium or vanadium. We do a bit of converting here and there, a spot of scrap recovery, but we hold no stockpiles. We rely for many of our key minerals on the Soviet Union, South Africa and China, whose skills in manipulating markets have been manifesting themselves in the trading bouses of London in the past few years. We draw critical supplies from such politically sensitive centres as Zaire, Zambia, Nigeria, Bolivia and Chile.

Now we are delivering them a vote of confidence. We see no problems. This is a condition with which apparently we are determined to live in spite of our decreasing ability to influence the cause and therefore the growing necessity to cushion the effect.

There is a simple solution. If any government would take the trouble to understand the commodities industry, if it would match regu-lation with a reasonable tax regime; investors would fund the stockpile. In spite of the disadvantages many already invest in strategics. I wonder how many more might do similarly if they felt that the opportunity to make a legitimate profit were linked with the ability to protect British industry.

Yours faithfully, DAVID HARGREAVES, Director,

Strategic Metals Corporation, De La Rue House. 5 Burlington Gardens, WI. November 14.

The time for talk has ended; the Abbeyfield recalled

From Miss Ann Parry

Sir, So the Abbeyfield Society is celebrating its silver jubilee this year. In your Special Report (November 15) you speak of the "founders", but in truth the "only begetter" was Richard Carr-Gomm who, in 1955, acquired the first house in Bermondsey and invited a few elderly and lonely people (it was not exclusively for the elderly) to move in as tenants. Two years later (November, 1957) the society was formed and legally registered. It was ungenerous not even to mention Richard's name in your otherwise excellent report. Some years later he dissociated himself from the society as he did not approve of the way it was develop-ing and started all over again in Bermondsey with the Carr-Gomm Society, which also now flourishes elsewhere. There is room for both societies. so great is the need for this sort of modest accommodation.

Yours truly, ANN PARRY. Whitebarns, Furneux Pelham. Hertfordshire. November 16.

Paper pounds

From Mr Anthony Rowley Sir, I follow from a distance the said saga of the demise of the British £1

I have seen few more fatuous statements than that by the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr Nigel Lawson, to the effect that the note has a "street life" of only 10 months. Of course it does if it is printed on paper of miserably low quality. The current £1 note is a pale nadow of its former self. We in Hongkong may have our problems, but the durability of the colony's notes is not one of them. The Hongkong 10 dollar note (roughly equal in value to the British pound nowadays) probably has a street life ten times that of the £1 note simply because it is printed on good quality paper.

I can assure you the Hongkong currency gets no less challenging treatment at the hands of local taxi drivers, shopkeepers and others than does the £1 note in Britain.

To do away with the £1 note is to further devalue the pound in the cycs of users. That can only help inflation, just as decimalisation of the currency did by creating confusion over the value of coins, effectively debasing them. Yours faithfully,

ANTHONY H. ROWLEY, Far Eastern Economic Review GPO Box 160, Hongkong. November 14.

From Lord Ridley Sir. Why do we not follow the example of Jersey which has had a square £1 coin for some time? It cannot possibly be mistaken for anything else. RIDLEY, House of Lords.

MR JOHN ANDERSON

Mr John Anderson CB, CBE, moted to be Chief Scientist at who through a long career did distinctive and varied work as a scientist in the service of the Admiralty, died at his home at Haslemere on November 11. He was 88.

Born at Beith, Ayrshire, Anderson received his technical education at the Royal Techni-cal College, Glasgow. He joined the Admiralty in 1918 at a time when serious attention was being given, at high scientific level, to the problem of detecting the submerged submarine, and he spent many years developing means of detection by underwater acoustic echo ranging. This was carried out largely at Portland, at what was then known as the Anti-Submarine Experimental Establishment, HMS Osprey.

It was largely owing to his work in this field that there was, at the outbreak of the Second World War, effective equipment already fitted in many ships. He continued this work throughout the war, but the establishment was moved to Fairlie on the Clyde from 1940 to 1946. In 1943 he became Superintending Scientist of the establishment, continuing in this capacity after its return to Portland in 1946.

It was a bold step to appoint for such responsibilities a man, aged 55, whose background had been entirely in the field of underwater acoustics; but the move was a success, largely because of his personal qualities. "Jock", as he was known to many, was a dynamic personality, giving strong leadership to his scientific staff, and having a quick intellectual grasp of issues involved. In addition he had the ability to get on well with naval officers, seeing their point of view and getting them to see his.

He retired in 1961 with the satisfaction that during his term at ASRE/ASWE it had made important new equipments available to the Fleet.

The pressure of this outside work led him to resign at the end of his first term as Vice-Chancellor and he devoted more of his time to the World Bank. His influence in India in particular was reflected in a considerable improvement in food production.

Crawford retained his interest in ANU, and in 1976 became its Chancellor. It was perhaps as a university administrator that his diverse capacities were best displayed. As Vice-Chancellor he had given purpose and energy to the university's research pro-gramme, and his grasp of the broad intellectual influences of his time lent coherence and relevance to his plans for the university's future.

FINANCE AND INDUSTRY

Executive Editor Kenneth Fleet

Reality of a 'white hot' technological revolution

Sir Nicholas Goodison attempted yester-day to scotch growing speculation that the Stock Exchange will be forced to ask for an extension of the end 1986 deadline agreed with the Government for scrapping stockbrokers' minimum commissions the clearance of the stock exchange was opening the Computers in the City Conference at the Barbican Centre, London when he said:

"Internal studies have led to the formation of a strategic plan for technical development to meet the new needs and it begins to look as if it could be the autumn of 1986 before we can intoduce the new market quotation and surveillance sys-

He went on: "We are of course determined to beat the date, but our ability to meet it depends very much on avoiding technological accidents."

Just so the changes of these occurring would appear quite high, considering the huge scale of the task facing Exchange's growing band of technology buffs.

The Stock Exchange is suffering from similar problems with the technology it needs for its new trading system. These were eloquently spelt out at the conference vesterday by Mr George Hayter, the information services director. The initial systems that would be installed in time to meet the Government deadline would make as much use as possible of existing machinery. Two years after the introduction of the initial trading support system, Mr Hayter expects something much more ambitious. The target system is code-named Mantis (Market and Trading Information System). It will be fully interactive. Under the initial system, which has been called SEAQ (Stock Exchange automated quotes) in deference to Nasdag, the US over-the-counter network to which it bears a considerable resemblance, all bargains will be done in time-honoured fashion, by direct negotiation either on the telephone or face to face. Mantis will bring electronic, push-button dealing.

Mr Hayter said he believed this sort of automatic dealing would be most suitable for smaller orders in active stocks. This is still by far the most common type of Stock Exchange transaction. About 83 per cent of equity bargains are of less than £10,000.

Sunday shopping off the shelf

This afternoon we will learn the conclusions of a committee appointed by the Home Office to review the Sunday trading laws. It was set up to get the Government off a political hook; keen to invigorate the retail sector by loosening the trading laws, its encouragement of a private member's bill to change the law ran into strong sabbatarian resistance in the Commons.

Now the Archbold Committee is certain to recommend considerable liberalization, and with the support of economic analysis by the Institute for Fiscal Studies, the Government should be able to effect changes. Although the claims of the impact on sales and employment are undoubtedly exaggerated, the iconsistencies and uneven enforcement of the existing law make reform essential.

The clear gainers will be those out-oftown stores which are building up business on the notion that shopping is fun for all the family; the consequence may be that more and more shops choose to close on a Monday, when the weekend

Mercury marriage retains its sparkle

The eye-catching detail in the mass of material which emerged yesterday about the Akroyd/Mercury/Rowe and Pit-man/Mullens merger is the full-year profit figure from the jobbing "partner," Ack-royd. Pretax profits for the year to end-September were just £9.4 million, compared to the previous year's £16.1 million. It looks very much as if jobbing in the second half especially was a fairly hair-raising business. Profits fell from £6.7 million to just £1.7 million. Putting it another way, Akroyd made as much profit in the whole year of last year, as it did in the first six months of the previous year. Earnings per share are halved from 51.9p to 26.4p.

The S. G. Warburg component, by contrast, offered a smoother picture, mainly because it does not volunteer anything as crude as numbers. All the Warburg board was prepared to say yesterday was that group interim profits were ahead of the comparable period last year. When the merger details were announced, the bank was less sanguine.

Nevertheless, the atmosphere last night after the results were announced was one of relaxed calm. "Little bang", that is the announcement of the merger itself, has plainly proved a success, judging by the high level of acceptances – 90 per cent plus from two signatories to the deal.

The operation is now looking to the future and concentrating in technical terms on those aspects of the four businesses where progress can be achieved before the Stock Exchange "big bang", when the new London gilts and equity markets go live. Stock Exchange assent to allow the introductin of outside membership is one hurdle. Another may well be the formidable task of knitting together 1,700 staff from the four separate businesses, all of which had separate capital structures, and hence salary tiers, into one coherent unit.

Mr David Scoley, chairman of Mercury was at pains to stress the adequacy of the equity capital base at £250 million. In the past. Warburg he said, had been driven by the profit and loss account rather than by the balance sheet footage. He saw no reason for that situation to change and he felt sufficiently confident last night to suggest that further links, involving Tokyo and New York connections, might well more holidays than ever, and saving over £2 million each year on staff costs alone. They're in good company. The TSB, Lloyd's Life Assurance, the Nature Conservancy Council, Sodastream, Therm-a-Stor plus legion others, have moved too. Peterborough has attracted over 300 new companies since 1973.

WHAT MADE 400 IDAYMAKERS, 1 QVEEN AND 50,000 ROMANS MOVE TO PETERBOROVGH?

A glance through our range of offices, factories and warehouses will explain why.

London may be only 50 minutes away, but every minute seems to knock thousands off your company overheads.

Find out exactly what made Peterborough the holiday capital of the world. Return the coupon, or call John Bouldin on Peterborough (0733) 68931.

STOCK MARKET REPORT

Speculation gives oil shares another bout of jitters

By Derek Pain and Pam Spooner

Nervousness and rumour fluttered around the oil pitches yesterday, leaving share prices lower for the second successive

A variety of worries has beset the oil industry in recent weeks, leaving world spot prices weak and vulnerable. The latest rumour is that Norway intends to again cut its oil prices, and so further undermine spot levels.

Some market men even heard that the British National oil corporation might be forced to trim its prices putting further pressure on producers.

But analysts at Wood, Mackenzie, the stockbroking firm, reckon the latter sugges-tion highly unlikely and the possibility of cuts by the Norwegians as nothing to worry

The price of Norway's Brent crude is still about 25 cents a barrel higher than BNOC prices, despite a cut at the start of this month. Any price cut for December would simply bring Norwegian oil back in line.

A spokesman for Wood, Mackenzie said: "That means there's no pressure on BNOC to bring prices down, even if the Norwegians make such a move for next month".

Nevertheless, share prices felt the chill of market talk and there were double figure losses for BP and Shell, down 10p and 30p respectively. Even Lasmo slipped back 5p to 351p - the shares have been firm-recently Bidders Dixons Group was on a mixture of exploration and takeover hopes - and there were losses of a few pence for Britvil, Burmah, Enterprise, Tricentrol and Ultramar. Elsewere the stock market was once again dominated by the British Telecom issue. Trading remained light with most City minds directed towards the BT sale. At the close the FT 30 share index was registering a 6.3 points fall to 912.8 points, a little above its worst level of the day.

The SE FT share index was also off its lowest point at 1.159.1 points, a fall of 8.3

Reshuffle and research hold key to Metal Box prospects

easily in terms of its market market is ignoring the improver ing quality of earnings, and nushing hard to get into the US, with its bigger, bouncier market, via merger or acqui-sition. It is working hard to improve returns in Britain a nature trading area where Metal Box has a fairly substantial market share, by making the output element more capital intensive. Finally, the group is pulling out of the the old Imperial trading areas like

The group's interim figures demonstrate the risks and rewards of this approach. Problems in Nigeria underline the wisdom of the long term strategy. Shortages of orders, and licences, plus other problems, have consumed to generate a near-£8 million downturn into the red. South Africa's difficulties point up the virtue of last year's well-timed £40 million capital reconstruction. Metal Box paints a relatively groomy picture of British demand in the second half. Yet the two-thirds jump in packag-ing profits to £21 million stems from higher capital spending quality of British earnings is clearly rising. The group can afford to finance the changes in its cost/output ratios. A £7 million charge below the line reflects redundancies and plant closures, but interest costs have remained unchanged, compared with last year's pro forms statement, at £11,2 million. Cash flow is still positive, and gearing low.

ing quality of earnings, and also disregarding the high R & D spending, which, just conceivably, produce a world-beating new product. C. E. Heath

C. E. Heath, whose interests range from insurance broking to reinsurance and underwriting turned in impressive halfyear figures yesterday. But although pretax profits to September 30 surged 47,2 per cent from £9.3m to £13.7m this year, the results contain some longer term uncertainties.

The group's insurance broking income moved ahead almost 14 per cent from last year's interim stage, to £16m this time. The main advances came in its British and Australian broking operations. But the result was enhanced by currency gains, although the company will not say by how much. Profits from broking improved from £4.9m to

On the face of it, the underwriting result was even more encouraging, with a leap in profits of 83 per cent from 3.9m to just over £7m. But although this was the most profitable area of business its quality is also the most questionable over the long

The result owes much to the success of the group's Australian operations, particularly its large exposure to workers' compensation business in the state of Victoria. But most analysts believe that the state will deprive C. E. Heath of these profits by taking over per cent respectively, and look workers' compensation ar-have on the group's figures is uncertain since the information provided by C. E. Heath yesterday was skimpy. Nevertheless, it is clear that the loss of this business would be a serious blow if the company does not diversify its underwriting business rapidly.

For the time being, however, C. E. Heath's carnings per share rose by more than 50 per cent to 26.6p, although the interim dividend was limited to a modest increase from 5.25p to 6p, leaving a p/e of 8.

Young's Brewery

The corporate master plan a Young's Brewery is switching emphasis from the production side, now that refurbishment of the Wandsworth Brewery has been completed, to marketing. New beers, including a Premium lager, are planned, and the group is busy building up the retail pub chain — the 20 per cent improvement in the better things to come.

The market, however, was unimpressed with Young's figures, and the shares dropped 5p to 140p. Sales have risep by about 10 per cent, and margins have slipped, reflecting liny volume growth, relative to the industry leaders.

If the regional brewers are to do well, Young ought to produce sparkling figures, operating, as it does, in the better off London area, and catering for fashion-conscious young drinkers with high disposable incomes. But competition apparently has been very fierce.

In the Commons on July 23, Mr Lawson referred to in his real rise recorded since 1979. autumn statement, it is worth looking at the detailed public expenditure effects provided by Professor Patrick Minford of Liverpool University, last week. Professor Minford estimated that the first 34 weeks of the coal strike cost the Government £1.2 billion - around £200 billion in lost tax receipts plus billion in higher public spending. billion. Thus, if there had been By no stretch of the imagination could the strike be blamed for the whole of the current 85 would have been reduced to year's over spending, as Mr and land. Lawson appeared to be suggesting last week. This is particu-However, converting this to larly so when the Government started with a £2.75 billion reserve for such unforeseen circumstances as the coal strike. In any case, the £2billion real rise in public spending now expected this year is not out of

There is another point to be considered when assessing the Government's public spending record. Of all the curiosities involved in calculating public expenditure totals, the treat-negative item of spending is the most questionable. In the current year, the Government expects to achieve a total of £1.9 billion in special sales of parts of state-owned industry, plus about £1.7billion from the sale of council houses

This £3.6 billion could legitimately be treated as revenue and added back to the £128 billion spending total for 1984/85, giving £131.6 billion or, converting to 1983/84 prices, £125.9 billion.

Amending the figures in this way shows a 14 per cent real rise line with the average annual in spending since 1978/79.

Whichever way one looks at it, public expenditure is still rising. The chart suggests that it moves broadly in line with growth and inflatin for the economy as a whole. Since public spending is major component of gdp, this is hardly Surprising. Also, and more importantly, there has been no major reassessment of the scope of what government should be spending during the 20-year period covered.

Labour and Conservative government may have different philosophical attitudes but this is only significant at the margin, for instance in the recent Star Chamber and Cabinet battles over next year's spending.

At the time of the last Budget, the Treasury published a Green Paper on long term public expenditure and taxation trends. It identified reasons for continued upward pressure on spending and taxation over the next 10 years, but failed to suggest reform to alleviate that Dressure.

The Treasury's rather limp conclusion was that Parliamen must decide how much public spending can be afforded, then stick to those targets.

Radical reform of public spending is possible but un-likely. Mr Norman Fowler, the Social Services Secretary, has four committees examining various aspects of social secur-ity. Even if sweeping changes are proposed by the com-mittees, it is difficult to see them being acted on. Social security reform may go the way of rates reform.

The ratio of public spending to tends to rise during recession and fall during periods of reasonably healthy economic

The Government has reduced this ratio in the past couple of years by restricting the increase in spending while encouraging growth through lower interest rates and lower exchange rate. If the growth keeps on coming, then the relative size of the public sector should continue to fall.

But it would be optimistic to expect a sudden transformation to success in controlling public spending.

As the court had said in R v Houldsworth (unreported, January 17, 1972); "An extended sentence had a dual purpose. It is designed to protect the public in two different ways: one, where necessary, by keeping a man in prison for a longer period than would otherwise be required; the other by providing for compulsory after care where this is desirable for a longer period than would otherwise be the case."

By section 28(3) five conditions had to be fulfilled. It was clear from the appellant's record, as Mr Wait conceded, that all the conditions were fulfilled. The case had been adjourned to enable a notice to be served on the appellant in accordance with section 29(3). That had now been done.

The appeal would be allowed by quashing the eight-year prison sentence and substituting a term of six years' imprisonment and issuing under section 28(4). The two-year prison sentence was to be served

Misuse of adoption procedure

In re H (Minors)

Before Sir John Arnold, President, and Mrs Justice Booth

The father had never been out of touch with his children. They spent occasional weekends with him and [Judgment delivered November 6] It was a misuse of the adoption n was a misuse of the adoption procedure if the object of the adoption application was to overide an area of administration granted to a local authority by a statute which determined that area such as the Child Care Act 1980.

The court would only make an adoption order with conditions attached relating to access by the natural parent if there was agreement between the parties.

The Court of Appeal so stated when dismissing an appeal by foster parents from the refusal of Judge Wingate. QC. to make an adopton order in their favour relating to children placed in their care by the children piaced in their care by the local authority. The children's father opposed the application.

Mr Peter Hunt for the foster parents, Mr Charles Spencer Taylor for the father, Mr Jeremy Posnansky for East Sussex County Council.

THE PRESIDENT said that the children who were the subject of the appeal were brother and sister aged 10 and nine years. Their mother had deserted her husband in 1977 and she had never been traced. The father had endeavoured to care for the children but had found the task impossible and had placed the children in the care of the East Sussex County Council pursuant to section I of the Children Act 1948. The children had been placed by the local authority with the foster parents on May 9, 1977. On March 26, 1981 the social services committee had passed a resolution assuming parental rights and duties over both children under section 3 of the Child Care Act 1980 on the ground that throughout the three previous years both children had been in the care of the local part of the school holidays were spent with the paternal grand-lems. In 1983, the local authority intimated to the foster parents that it was intended to remove the boy m their care and place him with other foster parents.

The foster parents appreciated that if the new placement was satisfactory then the sister would be removed as well. The foster parents launched the adoption application as the only way to stop the local authority from removing the children.

It had been held in A v Liverpool
City Council ([1982] AC 363) that where Parliament had, by statute, entrusted to a local authority the power and duty to make decisions as to the welfare of children the High Court would not exercise the entrefebrit invitations as to interwardship jurisdiction so to inter-vene in the exercise of discretion within the field committed to the local authority by statute.

Judge Wingate had said that the same consideration applied if the object of the adoption application was to frustrate the intention of the local authority in the exercise of the discretion granted to the local authority by the Child Care Act 1980. The court upheld that view. The father had refused his consent to the adoption but did not desire that the children be removed from the foster parents.

There was extensive evidence supporting the father's view that the children should remain with the foster parents with whom they had lived for the past seven years. The grandmother, the children's general practitioner, their headmaster and three social workers among others problems had improved recently. The foster mother could now give the boy more of her time. At one time there had been eight children in the house.

The father, although he did not wish the children to be removed, was adamant that he did not want access arrangements to be at the whim of the foster parents. At one time there had been regular weekly access but access was now on a fortnightly basis. The judge had accepted that the father was no being unreasonable when he refused th had been urged upon Judge Wingate that an adoption order could be made with conditions of access attached. However, the judge had considered that to impose condition on the adopters would be contrary to section 13 of the Adoption Act 1958.

The court had been referred to two reported cases: In re J (Adoption Order: Conditions) ([1973] Fam 106) and In re S (Minor) (Adoption Order: Access) ([1976] Fam 1). In both cases there had been a compromise and an agreed schedule placed before the court.

Lord Justice Cairns had said in In re S at p6: "Clearly no condition should be imposed which could be regarded as detracting from the rights and duties of the adoptive parents...it does appear to me that the conditions which are asked to be as not to affect the rights and the parents in relation to the matter of

In the present case there was no compromise. The father was justified in taking the attitude which he did. dismissed.

Late amendment to bankruptcy petition

[Judgment delivered November 8] A bankruptcy petition could not correct the date of the act of bankruptcy.

The Divisional Court in Bankruptcy in the Chancery Division so held allowing an appeal by the debtor against an order of Mr Registrar Keyes in Slough County Court. He had allowed amendments out of time to a bankruptcy petition by which different dates in respect of the act of bankruptcy were substituted for the dates appearing in the original petition.

Mr Martin Spencer for the debtor, Mr Richard Fawls for the potition-

It appeared that the registrar had reasoned as follows: only one act of bankruptcy occurred, the petition was presented within three months from the act, the error in the date of service was a simple misprint in the affidavit of service and carried into the petition, the bankrupt knew when in fact he had been served, the amendment of such a misprint in Paris (AFP) - Francois Mitterrand the French President has found himself pulled into the controversy over next year's Monte Carlo Rally. Sunderland are trying to defuse their potentially violent Milk Cup fourth round tie against Tottenham Hotspur at Roker Park tonight.

Tottenham had Clive Allen and Graham Roberts sent off in a 1-0 league defeat there in September, but Len Ashurst, the Sunderland manager is anxious to play down any thoughts about tonight's tie being a grudge match.

"It was just one of those games, and it was unfortunate that it was Spurs who suffered in having two players sent off. I don't think there will be any continuation of what happened that night." Ashurst said.
Sunderland will be without

Shaun Elliott, their captain. The England 'B' international is starting a three-match suspension, and is only one caution away from another ban after collecting his Seventh booking on the season, at West Ham on Saturday.

"He has been our most consistent player and we will miss his pace." Ashurst said. Peter Shreeves, the Totten-ham manager, said: "What happened in September is all in the past as far as we are concerned. We've had about 15 cames since then, travelled all over Europe and just haven't thought about it since it happened, but we still expect a tough game.

over-thirties in football have never had it so good. Youth used to be all the rage, but loday's youngsters are having to take second billing to players who at one time would have been regarded as "over the played in the reserves yesterday hill". These players are not so much over

The value of experience is being seen in all divisions of the Canon League, particularly the first, where an increasing number of players are proving that life gets better after 30. Jennings, aged 39, is perhaps the most remarkable example. When Arsenal signed him from Tottenham Hotspur for £40,000 in the summer of 1977, few thought that he would last more than three years at Highbury. He has not only far exceeded expectations but is still first choice goalkeeper for Arsenal and Northern Ireland and hoping to represent his country in the next World Cup finals.

The aging process seems to affect goalkeepers less quickly than others.

Southampton's steady climb up the table than anybody and his place in the England team is not threatened. Clemence's future at Tottenham was in jeopardy when he was displaced by Parks at the end of last season. Now, at 36, he is Tottenham's No again and playing as well as ever. So is his club colleague, Perryman, who at 32 is showing a new maturity

Trusty Hammer

Fitness and enthusiasm are the key to prolonging your football career and Bonds, aged 38, has an abundance of both. At the end of last season, Bonds told West Ham United's manager, John Lyall, that he did not want to be considered for first team duty again, except in an emergency. Lyall soon found that he could not do without him and West Ham's results have improved markedly since the old warrior's half of last season was mostly due to the outstanding form of Mariner and Talbot, both 31. Lorimer, who made his first team debut at 15, is still playing regularly for Leeds United at 37, a year older than their goalkeeper, Harvey. In the light of all this evidence perhaps footballers will begin to approach their thirties with a good deal more optimism.

Bayern capitalize on Rummenigge sale

Munich, (Reuter) - Bayern Munich have discarded their illustrious image in making the discovery that great football sides can be created without great names. Bayern severed their last link with bigname players when they sold their last genuine world-class "star", Karl-Heinz Rummenigge to Internazionale Milan in the summer Rummenigge's transfer followed last year's retirement of the club's midfield inspiration. Paul Breitner and led to dire forecasts, not least within the Bayern camp, of a transitional period in which the Munich club would have to settle for aa

Instead, Bayern began the season with six successive victories, a Bundesliga record and swiftly established a five-point the season, by 3-0 at Leverkusen in their last fur matches. Bayern remain two Bayern boast average gates of over 40,000, a more than healthy cash surplus from Rummenigge's 10m mark (£2.5m) transfer to Italy, and a place in the last cight of the European Cup Winners Cup.

As Bayern's league lead grew, their rainer. Udo Lattek, warned against compacency by reminding the team: "We are not as good as all that. . . and the others training ground. Lattek confessed he was as surprised as anyone at the team's good

"We've been pretty lucky and the other clubs have been unlucky. Besides most of our rivals have had a lot of injuries and new players to fit in," he explained.

Yet, Bayern have also been badly hit by injuries with their Danish midfield player, Soeren Lerby, Belgian goalkeeper, Jean-Marie Pfaff, and five other first-team players sidelined for long periods while five new signings have had to adjust to their new surroundings.

The 49-year-old trainer helped mould Bayern's greatest ever side when Franz Bechenbauer, Gerd Mueller and Sepp Maier came together to win three Eurpean Cups in a row from 1974-76.

Lattek left in 1974 to join Borussia Mönchengladbach, moving on later to Borussia Dortmund and Barcelona before returning to a jaded but still ambitious Bayern last year. His present team can in no way compare with the Beckenbauer side, he said. "We had personalities who could decide matches on their own. We could win games without going all out."

Yet. Lattek believes Bayern may have gained something more than a cash bonanza from Rummenigge's transfer. Rummenigge is a great player, a matchwinner, but since he has gone the team has had to find a new system of playing. Before, I often noticed a hesitation as players looked for Rummenigge to give

*Now there is variety as more players take responsibility. We have been lucky that Matthaeus has fitted in without problems and Lerby has developed so well this season. The side has an amazing team spirit. The problem I have now is that they are subconsciously playing not to lose so as to defend their league lead rather than

Bayern clearly spent wisely in the close season, snapping up five new players for season, snapping up five new players for women's tennis association rank-less than half the fee they received for INGS 1. M Navignova (US) 2. C Lloyd (US), 3. Rummenigge. Mathaeus, bought from Moenchengladbach for around 2.5m Mark (£625,000), a record fee between West German clubs, has brought a new impetus to the Bayern midfield. The only other big purchase, the young forward, Roland Wohlfarth, who cost half that from the second division club Duisburg, was bought mainly for cover but has established himself with 11 goals.

Lattek said it was too early to talk of the title, adding he was still worried by Hamburg. Werder Bremen and Borussia Monchengladbach. Yet those teams are far more worried about Bayern, especially of their strength in depth.

That Lattek can often afford to leave internationals such as Pfaff, Michael Rummenigge, Dieter Hoeness, Calle Del'Haye and Bernd Martin on the substitutes' bench says much for the new, functional team.

Lianelli Australians.

it was an heroic performance by a Llanelli team shorn of some of their more prominent players, and suffering difficulties owing to injuries in their preparation, to beat Australia by a goal, a try and three penalties to a goal, a try and two penalties yesterday. The crowd, despite the conditions, were well into song by the end - "We beat the wallabies?" Indeed, good old Sospan Fach.

It was a rugged, vigorous heavy conditions. The weather, crisp and sunny in the morning, turned to a steady drizzle by the afternoon. While both teams indicated early of their interest in playing some king of handling game, the conditions determined that it would be wiser to do otherwise. Quite naturally, it was Llanelli who came to terms with a different tactical plan. The Australians, failed to do so, and they looked forlornly hopeful that their handling would get them out of trouble. Instead, in the second half it increased their problems.

A penalty separated the sides at the end but between them Gravelle and Pearce missed six. The former had missed a kickable one within two min-utes before Black, from 25 metres, opened the score for the Australians. For a 10-minute period the visitors created overlaps galore and, looking as if they suffered from the British disease of failing to take Morgan brought the half-time disease of failing to take Morgan brought the half-time disease, they did eventually score to 9-3.

SQUASH RACKETS: EMERGING TALENTS AT HOME AND ABROAD Tremors in Australia is back

ranks of seniors By Colin McQuillan

The stylish breakthrough by Nicky Spurgeon in the British under

23 championships, accompanied by the re-establishment Hickox as the men's champion in the same Blue Stratos-sponsored event, will send tremors of trepidation through the senior ranks Miss Spurgeon successively removed two senior British champions from the strong women's field at Redwood Lodge, Bristol. In a fascinating five-set semi-final she rascuating inve-set semi-tinal she ended the long home pre-eminence of the British champion, Lisa Opie, the world No 2. Then she comprehensively crushed the 1982 senior champion, Alison Cummings, in their three-game, 44 minute final. Both these vasily more experienced and famously tough young women were driven from the court in desparing tears by the fierce strenght and impressive racket skill of the 22-year-old from Surrey. Hickox possesses a flashing, inventive playing technique that owes little to orthodox coaching and much to observent independent ball, this smiling 20-year-old, who is semi-final to the eventual winner, aslo from Surrey, can cut the best to pieces with a late flow of deadly a riposte in kind at Bristol cutting and dropped his way back from 0-7 to 6-7 in the fourth game after an hour-long fading attritional attempt in the first three. Hickox allowed everyone by reaching the world open that much proximity, perhaps in acceptance of the imitative compliment then summarily executed his frequent tournament companion with two shots of such deception that only those on court fully understood the consequences.

Munich (Reuter) - A new breed of young Australians is emerging to challenge Pakistan's traditional supremacy in squush. Heading it is Chris Dittmar, aged 20, who has risen in little more than 12 months from comparative obscurity to become the world's second-best Dittmar, who recently knocked Pakistan's Qamar Zaman off the No 2 pedestal, is one of four Australians in the world's top 10 and eight in the top 20. Although Pakistan's Jahangir Khan, unbeaten in more than three and a haif years, still rules the roost, only two of his compatriots are in the top 20. It is a far cry from the days when Pakistanis packed the world rankings. The ginger-haired, left-handed Dittmar believes that Australia is on the brink of even greater things with a generation of youngsters eager to emulate the feats of Geoff Hunt, who retired two years ago after more than a decade of winning world championships and other major Dittmar points out that Australia's national junior squad recently beat Pakistan to take the world team title and six Australians reached the last eight in the world under-19 shot practice. When his court championship. These boys are geometry is properly aligned, especially after enthusiastic opponts have flogged the first life out of the ment, in which he lost in a five-set Ross Norman, of New Zealand. "I've lost to a couple of them and there are a lot of others coming His friend Danny Lee attempted through. We have a really good little group of youngsters."

Dittmar could almost be placed in everyone by reaching the world open final, also in Munich, where he lost to Jahangir. "That week was like a dream. I couldn't believe what was happening to me", he said.

Since then Dittmar has moved steadily up the rankings with brilliant touch play which marks him as one of the most exciting players in the world to watch, Strangely, but perhaps wisely, he is not now pursuing the next obvious goal - to take over from Jahangir as the world's No 1.

"There are few blokes in the top 10 I haven't beaten regularly, so I don't think I can say I'm the second best yet", he said. "I mean that honestly, I'm not being modest. I must prove I'm the No 2 and then I'll look further."

It is Dittmar's misfortune that the immaculate Jahangir is the same age as he and could conceivably ntinue to dominate squash for the next decade or more. But there signs that other players are getting closer to the Pakistani's standard. New Zealand's Stuart Davenport gave him a close run in the final of the world Masters tournament in Warrington earlier this month.

Dittmar and the other top Australians, Dean Williams, Ross Thorne and Greg Pollard, have their best chance of confirming Australia's growing ascendancy at next month's world championships when they take on Jahangir in his Pakistan stronghold. French go

The klea is to establish an unofficial world championship for players aged 21 or less.

The 18 most highly ranked players in this age group will be eligible. The draw of 24 will be completed by invited players, at least one of whom will be British. Players expected to take part include Wilander, Nystrom, Edberg Henrik Sundstrom, Pat Cash, Aaron Krickstein, Libor Pimek, Henri Leconte and possibly Slobodan Zivojinovic, who won both his singles in Yugoslavia's Davis Cup tie against Britain at Eastbourne in September.

An additional incentive for outstanding youngsters to make the trip to Birmingham is that the tournament will be an ideal preparation for the Grand Prix Masters, to be played in New York the following week. ### Miss Wood loses her way By Lewine Mair

Shelicy Walpole may have looked her usual doleful self on court on the second day of the LTA's £8,000 event at Peterborough yesterday, but, underneath, it seemed there were new ripples of confidence as, were new ripples of confidence as, for a second successive day, she accomplished the difficult task of beating a promising British youngster ranked below her.

Belinda Borneo, aged 17, was her first victim and Clare Wood, aged 16, from Sussex, her second. Miss Walpole's start against Miss Wood was horribly tentative but, after losing the first set 1-6, she began to wait for her opponent to make the mistakes and ultimately won 1-6, 6-0, 6-1.

Miss Walpole, who was 19 two months ago, had no hesitation in describing 1984 as "my worst year ever." A win over Claudia Kohde-Kilish who is currently ranked eighth in the world, served to remind her that she could play a bit, but the effect of that result faded fast with a win-less run in the United with a win-less run in the United States.

Last week Miss Walpole lost to Holly Danforth. a 15-year-old American. Today she plays Miss Danthorth's doubles partner Kirsten Dreyer, also aged, 15. It can hardly be an inviting prospect. The only other British survivors in the last eight, Joanne Louis and Sally Reeves now meet each other. Miss Louis hit the ball hard and angled it well against Isabel le Crudo. a 20-year-old French girl who has many "surprise" shots at her disposal, but is not too well going in times of real pressure.

Miss Reeves, the only British player to take a point in the recent Junior Wightman Cup match won 6-7, 6-3, 6-2, against Ellinore Lightbody, of Wales. The English girl was her usual effective self but nothing impressed more than the way in which Miss Lightbody used her head to snatch the first set from a player currently ranked comfortably ahead of her.

The match lasted close to three hours, and indeed, was at one time making so little headway that the tournament referee, Mrs Georgina Clark, who is worryingly short of courts and court-time at this venue. was put uncomfortably in mind of a recent game under her jurisdiction in the United States. Though only two sets, the encounter in question ran to a mind-boggling and much publicised six hours and 31 minutes.

match. None of the three, Azharuddin, Prabhakar and Sivaramakrish-nan, are expected to play when the series opens in Bombay on November 28 but they could win caps before the rubber ends. The Indian selectors, whose chairman is Chandu Borde, the former all-rounder, are often accused in their own country of remaining faithful to established players too long England's defeat has been hailed by Indians as confirming the strength of the new generation of Indian players and the selectors have acknowledged this Sivaramakrishnan, the 18-year old leg-spinner who mesmerized the Englaidh batsmen in the second innings in Ahmedabad, won his only Test cap in West Indies 18 months ago. Azharuddin, who made 151 on Monday and Prabhakar, a swing bowler who helped India win the Asia Cup in Sharjah earlier this year, have not yet played in a Test. Their inclusion at Bombay is seen as giving them a taste of big match umosphere. Otherwise the Indian squad is as England have chosen 10 of their probable Test side for what is the final fixture before the Test, Pocock being likely to come in for Marks.

Pocock is regarded as the main attacking off-spinner but after the Ahmedabad setback there is a natural leaning towards Marks's inclusion because of his superior batting. There is little doubt that Englad's dreadful performance against the Under-25 XI has been take to heart by Gower's players. Whether there were umpiring mistakes or not the fact remained that England let iselves down in terms of application and technique. Above all, England, must not become paranoid about Indian umpires as paranoid about indian umpires as Keith Fletcher's side did three years ago. It will, however, mean adjustments in approach and if they include not padding away the ball against spinners, for fear of being given out, caught by the close fielderson, there are many purists fieldsmen, there are many purists who would not mind.

Gavaskar has chosen to miss today's match and his Test opening partner Gackwad is resume an injured foot, but the Englans attack will be fully stretched again, with the Test players. Vengsarkar and Sandeep Patil having their first look at the touring team's attack Rajput and Pandit, who is also the wicketkeeper, are considered Test batsmen of the future.

Rajkot, which lies about a hundred miles inland from the Arabian Sea, is in the threes of trying to establish itself as a regular Indian cricket centre. A new pitch was laid two years ago and gave spin bowler's some extravagant help on the first day, and games there have been low-scoring ones since. West Zone's bowlers include Ashok Patel. Zone's convers metuge Astok Patel, the off-spinner, whose action caused comment at Jaipur, and Smil Gudge, who bowls leg-breaks at a faster pace than usual. Balwinder faster pace than usual, naiwinder Sandhu, who played in India's World Cup win at Lord's, and Kulkarni, who appeared for the President's team against Gower's side, will share the new ball. England's only previous visit to Rajkot was made by Jardine's 1933-34 MCC side. They beat the Western Indian States XI, who included R. J. O. Brian Burnes, the Ryder Cup player, has been fined a total of £1,500 by the Professional Golfers' Association for two breaches of fiscipline, the 39-year-old Scot will, however, appeal against the 1500 penalty imposed for comments he made on television during the Drybrough Scottish Professional Championship at Dalmaboy in

The other line, of £1,000 has been inflicted, "for alleged derogatory remarks about The PGA and its remarks about The PGA and its staff during the D and I Leisure Southern PGA Championship at Mannings Heath in September", the PGA said in a statement yesterday.

Bill Longmuir has also been discipline. He was fixed £500 for failing to resume his first round in the Southern PGA tournament following a breach because of bad weather. It was alleged that he left the course without informing tournament officials. He subsequently sent a letter of explanation to the PGA and has 28 days to appeal against his fine.

Barnes learned of his penalties among the biggest ever levied in golf on his return from the King Hassan Trophy Tournament, which ended in Morocco on Sunday, and he was therefore not present at last week's PGA general committee hearing. Barnes said yesterday: "I realized that the lines were imminent and I shall write to the PGA about the Southern Championship because I think the peasity is a little sever.

Decker and Budd race turned down

The American Olympic runner The American Olympic runner, Mary Decker, whose hopes for a gold medal at the 1984 games were dashed by a collision with Zola Budd, has rejected a promoter's offer of $400,000 for a match race against the barefoot South African, her coach Dick Brown, told inzeil. West Germany (Reuter) Sweeping changes to make speed-skating more popular, including the skating more popular, including the introduction of pursuit events, relays and new distances, were announced on Monday by the International Skating Union's technical commission. Ideas would be drawn up to present to the ISU's congress in Denmark in 1986 along with environce announced plans to Newsweek.
"If Mary meets - or would have
"In a regular track-meet
"But the met - Zola in a regular track-meet race, fine." Brown said. "But the idea of meeting in a match race with all the attendent media hype just doesn't appeal." with previously announced plans to start a World Cup series. Thormod Mourn, of Norway, a member of the commission, said: "Our sport must leave behind the Middle Ages of its history and move into the modern age or it will soon be dead?"

● Eamonn Coghlan, who is 32 on Wednesday, will compete for the first time in the American national cross-country championship in Boston next Saturday.

Pessimism over betting trends proves unfounded

The pessimistic forecasts of two years ago concerning betting turnover trends have proved largely unfounded, according to the 23rd annual report of the Horserace Betting Levy Board, which is published today.

The board had cash receipts of £20.4m for the year ending March 31, 1984 and expenditure amounted to £20.8m during the same period. After taking other factors into account, the board's balance fell from £3.57m to £2.74m.

Revenue from bookmakers and

The pessimistic forecasts of two

Revenue from bookmakers and the Horserace Totalisator Board fell by more than £600,000 compared to by more than £500,000 compared to 1983, but this downward trend was not as steep as had been predicted. The chairman of the Levy Board, Sir Ian Trethowan, commenting upon the report, said: "The gloomy and, as it turned out, unduly pessimistic forecasts of two years ago have given way to more consideration of the Peat Marwick report, a detailed review of overall strategy and further representations to government about the evils of illegal betting will be our major priorities." Further evidence to support the view that previous forecasts were over-cautions was supplied when the Horserace Totalisator Board announced that their reservoires turnover had risen their racecourse turnover had riser by 13.7 per cent from £18.5m to £21.1m, despite fibe loss of several major betting fixtures owing to SEVETE WERTHET. Tote profits, too, were up and totalled nearly £1m for the period ending March 31, 1984, compared with £174,085 the previous year.

The fund is managed by Hampton and Sons, who are responsible for the 44 properties at present in the portfolio, a mixture of properties at the top end of the market, including new and refurbished blocks of flats

There is a four bedroomed modern house in Shawfield Street, Chelsea, bought in April 1983 for £165.000 and now valued (independently) at £300,000, which is let at £525 a week. Four apartments in a Grosvenor Estate development in Holbein Place, off Sloane Square, which cost £150.000, are let only to companies, at £400 a week. At Hyde Park Towers, for which Hamptons were the main selling agents when it was completed in 1979, they bought a three-bedroom flat in August for £237,000 which under the threemonth valuation is now worth £265,000, and which is to be let at £375-£400 a week.

The most expensive of the fund's properties is a house in Chesterfield Hill. Mayfair, for which the rent is £800 a week. Hamptons point out that the return on the rentals is 4.5-7 per cent, but the capital appreciation

They have on their books studio flats from £25,000, and can offer large unmodernized six-room flats in Carlisle Place at under £80,000 or a spacious and fully modernized three-bedroom flat in Ashley Gardens for £80.000.

The majority of residential properties in Westminster are mansion flats, which many people dismiss as a possible choice because they assume that the service charges are prohibitive. Karen Tasker at Hathaways admits that there are one or two blocks with service charges over £2,000 but says that most are fair and realistic. At Buckingham Court, a block at the junction of Buckingham Gate and Petty France which was modernized two years ago, they are offering a one-bedroom flat with reception room, kitchen and bathroom for £52,000 (service charge about £700 including heating and hot water) and a two-bedroom flat with reception room and kitchen/b-reakfast room for £75,000 (£1,100 service charge).

Vandon Court in Petty France is a 1930s built block, where Hathaways have a studio flat at £28,950 (service charge £240 a quarter) and a one bedroom flat for £32,000 with a service charge of £1.322

It is not that Westminster is cheap, merely that it is less expensive than its neighbours.

Countess Tarnowska, daughter Countess 1 arnowska, daugnter of the late Lord Astor of Hever, is selling her house near Aboyne. Desside, Aberdeenshire, to move to the south of England. The property, Kirklands of Coull, is a listed former manse set in about six acres of grounds and paddock, has three reception rooms, six bedrooms and three bathrooms, with a large sun room and nursery. Savills Edinburgh office are asking for offers over £115,000.

Countess Tarnowska, a portrait photographer working under the name Bridget Astor, is also a writer, and has recently published her first children's book Darlington Dennis, a true story of a beach pony she rescued from a knackers's yard and which became a champion.

Frencham Court, Lower Bourne, rarnham, Surrey, a Queen Anne house set in over two acres, is for Sale through Weller Eggar's Farnham office, which is asking for offers around £200,000. Frencham Court is the original part of the main house in the Frencham Vale estate, which was split up five years ago. Ancient vicarage

Embleton Tower, at the coastal village of Embleton in Northumberland, dates back to the early fourteenth century, becoming a vicarage in 1332 and remaining in coclesiastical occupation for more than 600 years.

The stone-built country house with its ancient tower is thought to have been damaged when the Scots army laid waste to Embleton in 1385, because the sum of £2.6s 5d was spent in repairs, since then it has been steadily improved, the main part dating from 1828.

Since 1978 both ancient and modern wings have been restored, and the house, with six bedrooms and grounds of nearly seven acresis for sale through the Corbridge office of Smiths Gore, seeking offers around £79,000.

Millfield Cottage, a Grade II listed seventeenth century house in Millfield Lane, Highgate, in need of modernization, is on offer around 750,000 through Hampton and Sons, Hampstead office. The property once housed employees of the Society of Hampstead Aqueducts formed in 1683 by William Peterson, a founder of the Bank of England, to supply the City with water.

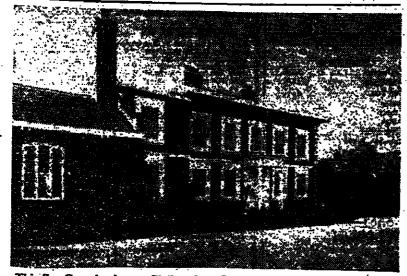

Press your own Little Oak, Mersham, near Ashford, Kent, is a whitened ragstone and brick house dating from the fifteenth century which has in its garden a small vineyard capable of producing about 1,500 bottles in a season.

The vineyared produces a Muller Thurgau wine under the Little Oak Vineyard label. The property has a guide price of £108,000 through Strutt and Parker's Canterbury quality construction materials.

This fine Georgian house, Gladsmuir, at Monken Hadley, Hadley Common, Hertfordshire, overlooks Hadley Common on one side while its garden faces south towards London 12 miles away. The house has been carefully restored recently, particularly the panelling and cornices. Gladsmuir has a reception hall, three reception rooms, a panelled study, seven bedrooms and three bathrooms, with outbuildings including a two-bedroomed staff cottage and eight acres of gardens. It has literary connexions, for W. H. Thackeray, grandfather of the novelist, and Mrs Emily Trollope (Anthony Trollope's sister) lived there, and more recently it was the home of Kingsley Amis and Elizabeth Jane Howard. Gladsmuir is for sale through Knight Frank and Elizabeth Jane Howard. Gladsmuir is for sale through Knight Frank and Rutley, who are asking for offers above £1.2m.

Scared of being a landlord

An Englishman's home is his castle. We all know that. But there is no most, literally or metaphorically, round it, as Sir Donald Tebbit, director general of the British Property Federation, pointed out in

Against the traditional notion that nobody can enter an Englishman's home without the invitation of the owner, he asserted that some 70 categories of officials had a statutory right of entry upon the property of a man's home for certain defined

These include VAT inspectors, Customs and Excise office, District Valuers, Rating Officers and even public utility officials and road engineers. That is by no means as bad as the terrifying knock of the secret police in some countries, but it is enough to make one think," he

It was an example of this theme in the lecture - Reality and Unreality in Real Estate - and he went on to argue that both the community and the Government failed to respect the intrinsic properties of property.

The private rented sector, he said. had been left to dwindle while the Conservative Party looked for votes from swelling the ranks of owneroccupiers and the Labour party hoped for the gratitude of those provided with municipal housing. "A healthy private rented sector is accounted for 90 per cent of the housing stock in 1913, it has fallen to below 10 per cent today. Nothing effective has been done to revive it.

Property Federation, pointed out in this year's Hamptons lecture organized by the Incorporated Society of Valuers and Auctioneers.

Every housing act since 1913 has set out to alleviate a housing storage but only succeeding inmaking it worse. The housing acts achieved this by making the landlord's position more and more intolerable: now private landlords have become an endangered species.
"They have been so single minded in their determination to protect the tenant at the expense of the landlord, that they have dried up the supply of rented homes," said Sir

> In his controversial assessment, Sir Donald said: "The cause of the housing shortage is clear: fear of being a landlord. The remedy is also clear, to remove that fear." But political parties were not prepared to support the proposition that a free market in rented houses must

> Yet it was the one mechanism which could in fairly short order ensure a plentiful supply of homes and the tenant's protection would be that he would always have a choice. "If the Government wants houses built for rent, it should not withdraw incentives offered for that purpose. If it wants landlords to remain in business, it should not deprive them of the true rental or sale value of their property," Sir Donald conclud-

Patrick Troughton: Box of Delights (BBC 1, 5.00 pm)

Seymour's adaptation of John Massfield's THE BOX OF DELIGHTS that proclaims it to be a serial designed to respect the norm in children's television programming. Much cash has been spent on it, much care laviahed on it and it is sinister enough, and charming enough, and well-cast enough, to appeal as much to the fasticlious grown-up as to the youngster. String the six episodes together and you have a full-length movie that could surround our charmes with the same Christmes. cinemas with the same Christmas queues that annually pour millions into the Disney coffers. It was a stroke of near-genius on the BBC's part so to organize things that the final episode of The Box of Delights should be screened on Christmas Eve. I have very few reservations

'Picking' returns to stricken coalfield

WEDNESDAY NOVEMBER 21 1984

By Craig Seton

Coal "picking" - one of the most recognizable symptoms of hardship in a mining commu-mity - has returned to the British coalfields on a scale not witnessed since the 1926 General Strike and the mass unemployment of the 1930s.

Thousands of striking min-ers and, sometimes, their wives and children, are daily scavenging for poor quality waste coal on slag or "spoil" leaps, particularly in communities where pits have been idle for the past nine mouths.
Equipped with picks, shovels, sieves and carts to carry away their hard-won prize, they work knee-deep in the dirty waste in the hunt for the small black nuggets that will keep their home fires burning.

Miners who have refused for nine months to return to work have lost their concessionary coal entitlement - up to nine tonnes a year - from the Coal Board and as many of their homes are still heated by solid fuels, the number of pickers is increasing dramatically with the onset of winter.

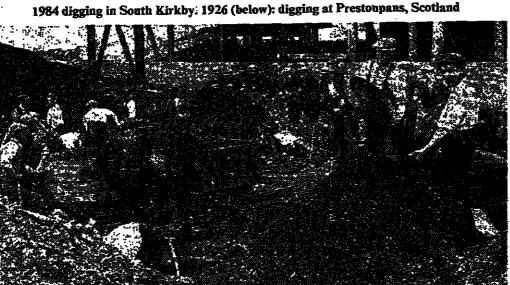

There is evidence now that many unemployed people in hard-pressed mining communi-ties have joined them.

Miners regard "picking" as a traditional right during hard times and the Coal Board claims to tura a blind eye from those who scavenge on its waste tips, even though they are regarded as trespassing and stealing. But, prosecutions and. usually dismissal follows when pickers invade mounds of washed coal stocks waiting for paying customers and some reports suggest that there might be a flourishing black market in the proceeds from such raids.

For some, the price of picking is even higher. Two Doncaster brothers - the sons of an unemployed former miner - died on Sunday when a railway embankment collapsed and buried them alive as they dug into an exposed coal seam.

The two boys, together with a striking miner's son, who escaped with a broken leg, were picking coal for sale to pensioners to raise pocket money. There have now been five "picking" deaths in York-shire since the strike began and in the North-east a striking miner died when an exposed coal outcrop he was working on a beach collapsed.

Hopes of £50 fall in Atlantic air fares

Both actions arose from allegations that BA and several other Atlantic airlines con-spired to drive Laker out of business by charging predatory fares contrary to the US anti-

The allegations have been strongly contested by the airlines, and the British Government has consistently argued that fares authorized by both governments under the Bermuda 2 bilateral aviation agreement could not be illegal if the agreement had any meaning. It accused the US of exporting its domestic lawn into international trade: the vexed question of "extra-terri-torially" also encountered in the controversy over the Russian gas pipeline orders.

London to New York winter return fares of £259 - some £40 below the current lowest - were benned by Mr Ridley in October when the US refused to give assurances that the fares would not be valuerable to anti-trust action in the US courts. British Airways then tried to introduce the low fare for a limited period as a special Christmas bargain offer, but vere again turned down by Mr Ridley last week. H a new agreement is put

● Mr Reagan's decision to end the Justice Department probe was regarded as an important victory for British

Mr Howard Metzenbaum, a spokesman for an umbrella group of organizations representing US air travellers, said the decision in the linal analysis could result in higher ticket prices and man analysis. ticket prices, and was another example of government inter-ference which hampered free competition among airlines. • REASONS FOR GOING: The Stefan Batory defectors are, for the most part, working men and women who felt they had no economic future (AFP

The majority say they want to go to the United States. Canada or Australia. Almost all are aged under 40 and there are six children.

"I had applied for a passport six years ago" Mr Jan Myszew-ki, an electrician from Warsaw, said. "When I finally got it last month, I immediately bought a ticket for the cheapest cruise available to take me to the West his week's cruise, he had paid 107.000 zlotys, the equivalent of $850 (£670) at the official rate or $180 on the black market. He scraped up the money although his monthly salary was only 18,000 zlotys. "In Poland you can work 24 hours a day and it's still not to make a decent enough to make a decent living. Mr Roman Peplinski, another electrician, from Gdansk, said. He left his wife and seven-month-old daughter behind and hopes they will be able to join him later. Many defectors spoke with feeling about the murder of Father Jerzy Popieluszko, the pro-Solidarity priest, by Polish security police. But they said the decision to leave had been economic rather than political. On arrival, defectors with families in West Germany contacted them. Others went to Roman Catholic missions.

One of these was particularly crowded, the Raphaelswerk, a church emigration assistance office. "There were at least 50 of us there", Mr Peplinski, who wants to go to Toronto, said. Bonn blazes trail, page 10 Letter from Melbourne

Bumping around in search of charisma

"What we really need", confessed a seasoned aide accompanying Mr Andrew Peacock as the Australian Opposition Leader's excessively long election trail wound through the early-morning stink of Sydney fish markets, is a bumper-sticker concept".

Having decided at an early stage that calling the Prime Minister, Mr Bob Hawke, "a little crook", across the floor of the federal parliament, was counter-productive remark. Mr Peacock has studiously avoided personality insult at the hustings, but it has left him little to say that conlated on a car bumper. The election is really about

Mr Hawke's management of the economy, and not even the Liberal/National opposition can deny the substantial short-term improvement. Mr Peacock, unable to produce any instant vision of a new Australia from his back pocket, is reduced to sniping chiefly at the Labour government's plans for capital-gains tax and death duties.

With Mr Hawke's landslide reelection being forecast by all polls, and with an electorate more concerned with how to recover from the recent thrashing by the visiting West Indies, the boredom factor is in full play.

Mr Peacock recently suffered the indignity of flying to Tasmania for a radio phone-in to which no one phoned: A few days later, a Sydney rally had to be abandoned at the last minute when nobody turned up.

Mr Peacock went walkabout twice yesterday, accompanied at all times by his heavily-built campaign manager, Reg Withers, whom everyone calls The Toecutter and with whom nobody argues.

The Leader of the Opposition does not kiss babies, nor do women kiss him, despite his good looks and distinguishedly greying hair above a constant puckish grin. But he is very fond of clapping total strangers round the shoulder, smiling broadly, and saying "Good on yer, mate". He does not attract vast crowds, be tries to elevate his pleasant and easy manner to the level of charisma, but does not quite succeed.

At a local radio station interview with his second wife Margaret, who has the look of a lady with ambitions, the discussion was mainly on his desire to run a radio station and how his wife cuts his bair Their choice of music was Stevie Wonder's "An Ordinary Day", which it clearly

Asked by an interviewer what he thought Mr Hawke's Achilles heel was, Mr Peacock firmly refused to say, except to complain at the dearth of philosophical political discussion nowadays
At a conference of Aus tralia's lively ethnic press, which covers those of airpos every origin except the British Mr Peacock almost became controversial by suggesting that the Hawke government's immigration policy, which seemed to favour every race except the British, was letting in large numbers of Central and South Americans who could well be terrorists.
